SIRE.

IN the name of the HIGHLAND SOCIETY of SCOTLAND, I present to YOUR MAJESTY the result of an undertaking already sanctioned by YOUR MAJESTY'S approbation, and which YOUR MAJESTY has deigned to regard as a laudable attempt to record and illustrate the Aboriginal Language of this portion of YOUR MAJESTY'S Dominions.

In patronising and supporting a work of this nature, the MEMBERS of the HIGHLAND SOCIETY are persuaded, that they will not be thought to have lost sight of those patriotic views and great public objects, for the promotion of which their Association was originally formed, and in the assiduous prosecution of which they have been signally encouraged and sustained by YOUR MAJESTY'S gracious Countenance and Protection.—I am,

SIRE,

YOUR MAJESTY'S

Most faithful Subject,

And most dutiful Servant,

HAMILTON & BRANDON,

PRESIDENT.

IT is fit the Public should be informed, by the HIGHLAND SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND, that in the prosecution of this undertaking, their Committee have availed themselves of the labours of those learned persons, whom, after much inquiry, they conceived to be best qualified for its various duties. The general conduct of the Work was intrusted to the Rev. Dr. JOHN MACLEOD, Minister of Dundonald, to whose ability and learning, the Committee have considered themselves bound to offer their tribute of just praise. In the details of some of its departments, he was assisted by the late Mr. EWEN MACLACHLAN of Aberdeen, the late Rev. Dr. ALEXANDER IRVINE of Little Dunkeld, and the Rev. ALEXANDER MACDONALD at Crieff. In its progress through the Press, it has been superintended and corrected by the Rev. MACINTOSH MACKAY, now Minister of Laggan; and it is only just to add, that in its present form, the Gaelic Dictionary is much indebted to his indefatigable labours, and that his philological acuteness and learning have greatly contributed to render it more accurate and complete.

THE high antiquity of the Celtic people and language, is a subject that has long attracted the observation and inquiry of the learned. Regarding the origin of the Celts, their descent, and the connection of their language with those of other nations, several theories have been formed, and ingenious conjectures hazarded. If antiquity of origin be an honour to a people or a language, that honour doubtless seems fairly conceded to the Celts and their tongue, by the very differences that exist among the opinions and views of those, who have treated on the subject : all moreover agree in assigning a high place to that antiquity. Though it may seem questionable, if it be of use to the interests of science or the advancement of truth, to weary the understanding with speculations on the Origin of a people, where certainty, which alone affords stability to opinion, is almost beyond hope ; yet it cannot be doubted, that the History of a people, and the philosophy of their language, must ever be held as subjects of the deepest interest to mankind. For such a study, the exhibition of a language itself, in the absence of surer records, affords the most satisfactory materials, to inform the inquirer, and to guide the learned. The interest and value of philological science are universally admitted ; but, for its pursuit, it is believed that, a want has been long experienced by all Europeans, in the scarcity of materials afforded them from the several dialects of the Celtic. While its traces are continually met with in the structure of the modern languages of Europe, as well as in the more ancient tongues both of Greece and Rome ; little, generally, has yet been done, to exhibit to the philologist what remains on record, or what yet continues to be spoken of the Celtic language, in its various dialects.

The living dialects of the Celtic are, the Armoric or Bas Breton, the Welsh, the Irish, and the Gaelic of Scotland : besides these also the Manks continues to be spoken ; but this last may be considered as a mere local or provincial variety of the Irish and the Gaelic of Scotland ; and, being confined in its use to one island comparatively small, it does not appear to merit much separate consideration. The Cornish dialect has long ceased to be spoken, and the memorials of it are scanty ; though, in so far as preserved, they manifest a close alliance, not only with the neighbouring dialect of the Welsh, but with those of Ireland and Scotland.

The Basque, a remnant of the ancient language of Spain, has been by some supposed to be a dialect of the Celtic; but, by later writers, this opinion has been questioned.

Of some of the dialects above mentioned, viz. the Armoric, the Welsh and the Irish, Vocabularies or Dictionaries had been for some time published; while the dialect of Scotland or the Scoto-Gaelic, continued to be unknown to the learned and to the public, in any lexicographical form: two or three Vocabularies of it had indeed been published, but on such a limited system and plan, as not to serve for the proper elucidation of the Celtic dialect of Scotland. Under these considerations it occurred, several years ago, to some members of the Highland Society of Scotland, that a Dictionary of the Scoto-Gaelic would be useful and acceptable to the public; and especially to the students of philology, both in this country and on the continent of Europe. The Highland Society, though not specially incorporated for the pursuit of literary objects, readily adopted the suggestion thus brought before them; and a committee of their number was appointed, to determine the general plan of the work, to engage compilers, and to superintend its progress. It was the opinion of the Committee, that it would be inexpedient and at present impracticable to attempt the compilation of a General Dictionary of the Celtic language, in the more extended sense of that name, comprehending all its cognate dialects. They saw that such a Dictionary was one of the great desiderata, in the proper history as well as in the science of philology; but that it could ultimately be attained only by means of particular vocabularies and etymological investigations of the various branches from the general stock. They confined therefore their object to the compilation of a Dictionary, which might exhibit and illustrate whatever could be collected of the Scoto-Celtic language, either from authentic literary compositions, or from the vernacular dialect of the present Celtic population of Scotland.

From this general view of the nature and objects of the work, it obviously followed, as a primary rule in its compilation, that no words should be introduced into the Vocabulary, but such as could be shown to have been actually in use in Scotland, either in writing or in ordinary speech: yet in the progress of the compilation, it was found expedient to depart, in a certain degree, from the strict exclusion of words not supported by such authority and use. The close affinity, approaching to identity, of the dialects of Ireland and Scotland, made it desirable to admit many words found in the Lexicons of the Irish, when they appeared to throw light on the etymological composition of words in the Scottish dialect of the Celtic, which otherwise could not be successfully analysed. Several terms for particular objects, now gone into disuse in the vernacular dialect of Scottish Highlanders or changed for others, have been also admitted, especially when they alluded to historical facts descriptive of Celtic usages and manners. But all words of this description, together with such as were once certainly used in Scotland, will be found distinguished from the current and common words of the language as now spoken, by being printed in a smaller type and marked with an asterisk. Such a distinction seemed advisable, in reference to another material object in this compilation, that the Dictionary might be useful, not only to the philologist and the general scholar, but also to those natives of Scotland or others, who might desire to become acquainted with the spoken language of the modern Highlanders, or with the few works remaining in the dialect.

The student of languages need scarcely be told, that an important part of the structure of any language, when written, is its system of orthography: and, in the Gaelic, it is of more perhaps than ordinary consequence, that the orthography should be as much as possible systematic and simplified. Its articulations and sounds are almost entirely different from those of any other among the modern or ancient tongues of Europe; and though it be not possible to represent sound, by any notation of letters, with sufficient accuracy and plainness; yet the greatest facility attainable, in the absence of oral communication, is afforded by a regular system of such notation. It is in course of the use and cultivation of languages by writing, that a system of orthography becomes fixed, and properly conventional. Such a benefit, has been denied by circumstances to the Scoto-Gaelic; its written records being few, and the practice of writing it in latter times having been disused, if we except the few volumes that in recent years have, from time to time, been given to the public, of the native poetry and songs; wherein no system of orthography was followed, because the reading or writing of Gaelic was unusual with the compilers. This deficiency was happily and in a great measure, supplied by the translation of the Scriptures, and the publication of them in Scoto-Gaelic, by the Society in Scotland for Propagating Christian Knowledge. The system of orthography followed there, adopted, as it was, by natives of intelligence and learning in the Scottish Highlands, and improved by successive editions of the Scriptures, has been strictly adhered to in the present work. But when there was found to have existed any remarkable varieties in the spelling of a word, at different times, or as spoken and pronounced in different districts of the Highlands, these have been carefully enumerated; and when they are widely different in the leading or characteristic letters, the varieties are inserted in their proper alphabetical places; and a reference is made to the standard word, under which their explanation may be found. A few deviations from the given standard will be discovered; but those who consult the work are referred to the synopsis of Grammar prefixed, where it is hoped their propriety has been vindicated. It must also be observed, that the adherence to a standard orthography refers to the word, as entered in its alphabetical place in the Vocabulary or Index Verborum. In the quotations or authorities appended, it has not been deemed expedient, always to reduce the words to the same standard, but rather to leave them occasionally in the shape, in which they were found; when, by so doing, they could, through the medium of the accompanying translations, be made intelligible to the reader.

In the execution of the task assigned to the compilers, it formed an important part of their duty, to give, after the leading signification, the various derivative and secondary meanings of each word: these have been given in English first, and next in Latin. With a view of giving a more general interest and utility to the work in foreign countries, the latter translation seemed essentially requisite. When a word is found to have different significations, these are distinguished numerically by figures ; and the authority, when found in writing, follows each interpretation in its place. It is here willingly conceded, that a strict etymological survey of the words in this work, may afford an apparent ground for questioning whether the primary and derivative meanings have had their proper places assigned them. Besides however this being held by the compilers a matter of minor importance, while all the various meanings, in number, are attended to ; it is true of the Gaelic language, and, to some extent, of every other, that the primary meaning in use differs often and widely from the primary etymological meaning ; and that the secondary meanings also have not multiplied in regular succession from the primary, but have been adopted by accidents and circumstances, attendant upon the manners and history of the people, more interesting to contemplate, than easy to trace with any certainty and precision. In a language where literature has abounded, and of which authentic records are preserved, these furnish landmarks to the lexicographer and the etymologist, guiding them to the roots and true primary meanings of words ; but as in Gaelic, where such helps are very scantily afforded, it is doing the most that can well be achieved, to follow the order that is known in the practice of speech, as to the more common, and the less common uses and meanings of words. The various significations and meanings, when distinctly noted, though apparently departing in theory from their legitimate order, will not, on that account be less useful to the philologist, in his endeavours to trace the connection of one language with another.

An important part of the present work has been, the selection of proper examples for the uses of words, from genuine compositions in the Scoto-Gaelic tongue, and from the phraseologies of modern speech. In every light in which the purposes of lexicography are to be viewed, whether of a dead or a living language, it is the exhibition of such examples, that gives to it confirmation and value. The aids that could be derived from written compositions were but scanty : these have, however, been explored with care. Among the few printed volumes that exist in the language, besides the translation of the Scriptures, the character of those volumes, and the materials of which they are composed, did not always admit of their being used with propriety or advantage. They chiefly consist of poetry, in fugitive pieces and on local subjects, which, however well understood by and interesting to the natives of the country, would render any attempt at their translation unavailing, if not ludicrous ; or would at least render necessary a periphrastic mode of transferring them into English and Latin, more fatiguing to the reader and cumbrous to the work, than useful or profitable, in a faithful exhibition of the language. Nor need it be concealed, that the humble origin of such works, and the limited knowledge of their authors, untrained in the courtesies of politer literature, have rendered the breathings of their muse, in too many instances, unworthy of record. That poetic genius and fire were vouchsafed to the Scoto-Celts, is not meant to be denied : enough, it is presumed, has been recorded in the present work, to vindicate the general character, though we decline discussion on the amount, or the age, of their poetry. It is native genius alone, that can surmount the formidable disadvantages of situation and circumstances; and it is language alone, the vehicle of sentiment, that can support genius itself, and help to secure its unperishing reward. That the Gaelic language was equal to the task that genius imposed upon it, is sufficiently perceptible, even from the quotations that are scattered through the following work: but, of which, circumstances already alluded to have limited the number. At the commencement of this undertaking, it was expected that, as a source of authorities for illustration of the language, the ancient Gaelic Manuscripts, belonging to the Highland Society of Scotland, would be brought into immediate and important use. And it is but justice to the memory of a very learned and ingenious gentleman, the late Mr. Ewen MacLachlan of Aberdeen, to state that, he bestowed much assiduous labour on the deciphering of some of these, under disadvantages which scarcely any thing, but his own singular ardour, could have surmounted: he died before his task was completed; and in him the Highland Society lost one of the compilers, to whom they looked with much confidence and hope. The labour he bestowed was however in a great measure lost, by its not having been so far advanced, as to be directly serviceable in the further compilation of the present work. The business of paleography must necessarily be slow; and in the particular department of the more ancient Gaelic writings, it has been very rarely an object of study in Scotland, from the small number of manuscripts preserved. It may also be observed, that the materials or contents of the manuscripts mentioned, so far as deciphered, were not found to be of such a kind, as to make them desirable for authorities in general, and they have therefore been comparatively but seldom appealed to. The titles of several volumes, used for this purpose, are carefully noted at the end of each quotation. Where any particular meaning of a word has occurred in a written work, and when the quotation could not well be given, for reasons already alluded to, the title of the volume and the particular page are specified. In producing authorities, or in supplying examples from the phraseologies of modern speech, the compilers have been studious, rather to avoid, than to multiply their quotations unnecessarily. It is true, that by deriving authorities from common speech, it would have been easy to illustrate every word by a quotation; but the nature of the work seemed to confine this demand for illustration to peculiarities of phrase, of idiom, and of technical terms, elucidating the structure of the language. Such as these have been recorded with care; and where a word occurred, in the ordinary use of which no special peculiarity was observable, and where no apposite example from writings in the language could be found to illustrate its use, the term "Common Speech" has been appended, as a guarantee for its wonted and ordinary use in the language; and it is hoped, in every instance, with sufficient accuracy and caution. In following out the original plan of the work, rendering the significations of Gaelic words into a literal translation in English and Latin, it became necessary to translate every quotation also into these two languages: and into each of them the translation has been made as closely literal or verbal as could be ventured upon, to convey the precise meaning in Gaelic, and the peculiarities of its expression also, into the other two. It was seen that this method and style of translation might be deemed by many objectionable, as unpleasant in itself both to the eye and ear of the reader in English or Latin ; and by many it is considered not the most successful mode of transferring the precise ideas of one language into another, to attempt it by the most literal rendering : but, when a difference of opinion exists on a practical subject, decision is necessary in making a choice. It appeared to the conductors of the present work, that a closely literal translation promised the greater utility ; and to the candid mind no farther apology for that choice is necessary. They are aware that, in the Latin department of the translation, much offence may be given to the admirers of that language ; and they are also conscious that literalism is closely allied to barbarism. But, if even a charge of the latter be frequently incurred, they see no cause to repent a temerity, that may be termed innocuous ; if, at that expense, the structure and character of the Scotch-Gaelic, as a spoken and written dialect, have been more clearly elucidated for those, who could not otherwise be furnished with so close a view of its peculiarities and usage.

Another important and essential department of the work was, to trace and indicate the etymology of words. It was judged by its conductors, to be very inexpedient, to load the work with etymological discussion ; yet it seemed indispensable to its usefulness and interest, that the etymology of the language, so far as it could be distinctly traced, should form a part of the plan : how far, in this department, the compilers have succeeded in throwing any additional light upon the structure and elements of the Gaelic, may be variously appreciated. To subdue the excursive-ness of fancy in an eagerness of etymological research, has not been always found an easy task by those, who have given themselves with any zeal to that interesting study. The original plan of the work having restrained the compilers from ample or lengthened discussion ; it was deemed advisable that, in noting the etymology of words, they should confine themselves to the indication of such etymons as were evidently and purely Gaelic : these will be found indicated within parentheses, and immediately following the insertion of the words in their grammatical structure. The compilers do not claim the merit of having pointed out the origin or structure of every word in their Vocabulary ; and they are sensible of being exposed to the charge of having done so, in much fewer instances than might have been safely ventured. But, in a language where etymological research has hitherto done so little, and where they were left to the sole guidance of their own opinions upon this subject, they considered it better not to venture rashly beyond bounds generally obvious and allowed. Connected with the etymological department, or rather forming a portion of the same subject, was the collection and insertion of corresponding words of the same apparent origin, in the other dialects of the Celtic. It is well known to those who are conversant with philological science, that the collecting of similar words in different dialects and languages, and appending them, as either its kindred or descendants or parentage, to the word itself, is doing but little towards the discovery of their actual origin, history and descent : with such an attempt, however, the conductors of the present work had to satisfy themselves. To do more, to go into the history of words, forming a theory of supposable descent and origin, with any reasonable appearance of consistency and stability, would require, not a mere verbal knowledge of other dialects and languages, as derived from the hasty perusal of their various lexicons ; but a minute and a critical acquaintance with the languages themselves, as spoken or written, and an intimacy with their several histories ; which it falls to the lot of very few, to have either leisure or opportunity or the means of acquiring. It is only when furnished with extensive knowledge, and liberal views of the history, the structure and the character of languages in general, that the etymologist can approach his task with suitable preparation ; and that his labours may serve to delight, to instruct, and enlighten the world. The conductors of this work, acknowledging that they did not aspire to such a degree of eminence, judged that they would at least be meritoriously engaged, in throwing facilities in the way of the more learned and acute philologist ; and their labours will not have been lost, if they guide on his way the pursuer of a more extensive and a higher career, in elucidating the history of the languages and nations of civilized Europe. Their principal care has been to discover and select affinities to the words of the Scoto-Gaelic, in the other dialects of the Celtic ; especially in the Welsh, the Armoric and the Cornish. The close resemblance, in almost all its words, of the Irish dialect with the Scoto-Gaelic, rendered it unnecessary, in their view, to attend to affinities in the former. Nor have they confined themselves to the dialects of the Celtic, in this department of bringing forward affinities : they could not be insensible to the fact, that, with the dialects of the Celtic now spoken, much of the Gothic stream of language has been mingled. While it was not their province to enter upon the discussion, directly or otherwise, of the comparative antiquity, or the prevalent claim to an after-influence, that either of those fountains of European speech possess in forming the other ; they viewed it as their business, in so far as lay within their reach, to note the affinities with Scoto-Gaelic, which they were led to discover in the dialects of the Gothic ; especially in the German, the Anglo-Saxon, the Scottish dialect of the Gothic, the Swedish, the Danish and the Icelandic. Striking affinities from the Eastern languages, the Hebrew, Chaldee, Persic and Arabic, have also been sought for and are exhibited. In these latter they are aware that, their investigations have been of a very limited nature ; and that, in bringing forward the few facts they have produced, they have been taking but a glance at one of the most curious, important and interesting subjects, that can engage the attention of the philologist or the student of history. The words from the sources last mentioned, quoted as instances of a striking affinity, are generally exhibited in their proper characters ; and the student of Eastern languages is entitled to an apology, if he do not always find the notation of these characters correct. Errors have arisen from circumstances, which, in the printing of the present work, and the sources from which the compilers took their authorities, could not easily be avoided : the sources also whence affinities have been derived, are regularly noted, being chiefly the various Lexicons to which they had access.

Thus, in each article or word, inserted in the Vocabulary of the first part of this work, will be found, first, the word itself, with its leading inflections in abbreviated form ; then its translation into English and Latin ; next, an example or authority, with reference to the source in the language from which it has been derived, translated also into English and Latin ; following which, are introduced, when necessary to be noticed, peculiar and idiomatic phrases and compounds in the Scoto-Gaelic language, also translated ; and in conclusion such affinities are appended, where they could be discovered, as have been already mentioned. Though it is by study of the Grammar of the Scoto-Gaelic, that a knowledge of the inflections and frame-work of the language is alone to be satisfactorily learned, it may here be expected that a few rules should be given, to facilitate the progress of those who desire to peruse the work. It is in declinable words, that difficulties will occur to the reader. He will find Substantive Nouns entered in their simple or nominative form, followed by the terminational genitive form, and nominative plural termination : where these inflections are irregular, they are entered at length. Adjective Nouns are entered in their simple or positive state, followed by their comparative degree, which is pointed out by its terminational form ; and where these are irregular, they are also entered at length. Pronouns, whether irregularly declined or indeclinable, are given at length in their several accidents. Of Verbs, the root in Scoto-Gaelic being always found in the second person singular of the imperative mood, they have been introduced in that form ; and the translations are given in the corresponding part of the English and Latin. The second person singular of the imperative is immediately followed by the terminating syllable of the future indicative, which joined to the imperative, first given, forms that other constituent part of the verb ; and then follows the initial form of the preterit indicative ; which, substituted for the simple initial form of the imperative, changes the imperative into the preterit tense of the indicative ; from which three are formed in Gaelic, the other parts of the verb : when these also are irregular, they are exhibited at full length. The indeclinable words of the language demand no special instruction for a consultation of the work with advantage. But it may here be advantageously hinted to the etymologist, that various enunciations, so closely similar as to be only distinguishable by a native, are necessarily represented by different combinations of consonants. Thus, of the consonants, dh and gh as well as ch have but one guttural sound, approaching to the various sounds of the  $\chi$  of the Greeks. And of the simple vowel sounds, it may be remarked that, a, o and u, when found in terminational or penultimate syllables, represent generally but the same sound ; it being one characteristic of the Scoto-Gaelic, that all penultimate and terminational syllables of words are but lightly, if not imperfectly pronounced.

With respect to the fulness of the Vocabulary of Gaelic words exhibited in the first part of the work, the conductors could neither expect nor the compilers engage, that it should be free from many omissions. There are circumstances attendant upon different languages, which, to the Lexicographer of any of them, are disadvantageous, serving to conceal from his view multitudes of words and of terms ; that, if known to him, would amplify and enrich the record of language which he attempts to compose. Among these disadvantages, a formidable one is, provincial phraseology ; and the several provinces of a country have usually their own peculiarities in the spoken Vocabulary : this is, to an unusual degree, true of the Highlands of Scotland : and where literature and written record have done so little, to elucidate or explain them, there is nothing that can supply a correct acquaintance with provincialisms, but an extensive communication and local knowledge. While the compilers flatter themselves, that the pains they have taken to acquire an acquaintance with these, have not been unsuccessful ; they are aware that, in every province of their country, a reader of their work may find wanting in their Vocabulary many terms and words which are familiar to himself. Of such, many might be valuable acquisitions to the etymologist, the philologist and the antiquary, and would contribute to the enriching of the work with so many separate data, for research and inquiry : the compilers have exerted themselves to obtain a knowledge of them ; and, where they have failed, they trust that their omissions will be viewed with indulgence. Of all the spoken modern languages of Europe, the Gaelic perhaps affords the greatest facilities in the formation of compound terms and words ; and to such a degree does this facility exist, that a native is scarcely ever at a loss to form a compound term for the expression of any rising idea. To one intimately acquainted with the provincial peculiarities of the Scoto-Gaelic, it will even appear that such peculiarities often influence the character by modifying the structure of compound terms. That numbers of such have been omitted, will certainly be manifest ; but, with respect to the general purposes of this work, the omission of such combined terms may not be much regretted : it is the omission of simple terms that is more to be deprecated ; and the apology here offered, is one which the compilers can honestly make, that they have not spared industry to avoid it.

The Second Part of the Work will be found to contain a full Vocabulary of the English language, from Todd's edition of Johnson's Dictionary. In the compilation of this part, it appeared, that the purposes intended would not be fulfilled, by presenting a Vocabulary of English words, followed by their proper representatives in Gaelic ; without advancing another step, to distinguish the various acceptations of the English term from each other ; giving in its place, after each meaning in English, its corresponding Gaelic term or word. The adoption of this plan has indeed served to increase the size of the work, which in some respects may be viewed with regret ; but it is hoped, that it has at the same time furnished the English scholar with an exhibition of the Gaelic language, that has hitherto been unknown to him ; and in so full and detailed a manner, as to make him still more fully and easily acquainted with its Vocabulary and phraseology, than would have been possible even by the Vocabulary and illustrations of the First Part of the work. In the adhibiting of Gaelic words to correspond with the English, it can scarcely be expected, that every word of the former language shall be found with perfect accuracy and precision, representing the same English word, by which it may have been translated in the First Part. It is hoped that discrepancies are rare ; and the translation of the English Vocabulary into Gaelic, being to the compiler a work more of memory and of practical knowledge of Gaelic, than of study or research, the suggestions of memory have been adopted without fear of any considerable error ; and thus shades of difference may frequently occur, between the meanings ascribed to a Gaelic word in the First and the Second Parts. It must also be borne in mind, that in the work of a translation so minute and particular as of the words of one language in detail into another, it is absolutely more than can be achieved by the utmost faithfulness, on the part of the translator, to find words in the one language, exactly corresponding to every word and meaning of a word that is of current use in the other. In the present work also there was added to this difficulty, the comparative want of copiousness, that must necessarily be supposed to exist in the Gaelic language, so much less cultivated as it is, and unmodelled to the necessities, the terms, phraseology and usages of the English, in arts, in sciences, in abstract discourse, in disquisitions, in the style and habits of conversation and writing. The fulness that has been given to the Second Part, the English and Gaelic Vocabulary, has also regard to the practical use of the Work to the student of Gaelic as a spoken and written language ; and to such it is hoped an aid has been offered, which hitherto has been almost wholly denied to him.

The Third Part of the Work consists of a Latin Vocabulary, translated into Gaelic. In this, it has been the desire of the compilers, to unite conciseness with accuracy and sufficient fulness ; but it has not been here considered expedient to exhaust the Vocabulary of the Latin language. Many of its derivative and compound words, of its technical terms and of its foreign additions from other languages, have been omitted, as serving none of the purposes for which this work is intended. In all the words judged necessary to be inserted, the different leading significations have been regarded ; these are illustrated by the shortest possible explanation, and the corresponding Gaelic word or phrase is given in its place. The two latter parts of the work will, according to the circumstances in which the reader is placed, help to conduct him at once to the Gaelic word in the First Part ; under which all the necessary explanations are to be found.

The compendium of Grammar prefixed to the Dictionary will be found an abridged transcript of that formerly published by Dr. Stewart ; the incontestable merits of whose work, as a Grammar of the language, have been universally admitted. It was intended, that an Appendix should be added to the Dictionary, explanatory of names of places of Celtic origin, both in the Highlands of Scotland and other parts of the kingdom : but it was eventually found that such an addition would infringe upon the limits, that had already been prescribed to the work ; and that, to do justice to the subject intended, interesting and curious in itself, a separate volume would be more appropriate : this, it is probable, may at some future period appear, as a suitable companion to the Dictionary.

OF PRONUNCIATION AND ORTHOGRAPHY.

THE Gaelic alphabet consists of eighteen letters : a, b, c, d, e, f, g, h, i, l, m, n, o, p, r, s, t, u. Of these, five are vowels, a, e, i, o, u; the rest consonants.

Beside the common division of the letters into vowels and consonants, it is found convenient to adopt some further subdivisions.

The vowels are divided into broad and small. A, o, u, are called broad vowels; e, i, small vowels.

The consonants are divided into Mutes and Liquids: Mutes, b, c, d, f, g, m, p, t. Liquids, l, n, r, s. They are also divided into Labials, Palatals, and Linguals; so named from the organs employed in pronouncing them: Labials, b, f, m, p; Palatals, c, g; Linguals, d, l, n, r, s, t.

The aspirate h is not included in any of these divisions.

OF THE SOUNDS OF THE VOWELS.

All the vowels are sometimes long, sometimes short. A long vowel is marked with an accent, especially when the quantity of the vowel determines the meaning of the word; as 'bàs' death, 'sàil' the heel, 'càraid' a pair, 'fìs' again, 'mò' more, 'lòn' a marsh; which are distinguished by the accent alone from 'bas' the palm of the hand, 'sail' a beam, 'caraid' a friend, 'fìs' to, lòn' the elk.

All the vowels, but especially the broad ones, have somewhat of a nasal sound when preceded or followed by m, mh, n, nn. No vowels are doubled in the same syllable like ee, oo, in English.

In almost all polysyllables, excepting some words compounded with a preposition, the accent falls on the first syllable. The other syllables are short and unaccented; and the vowels in that situation have, in general, the same short obscure sound. Hence it happens that the broad vowels, in these syllables, are often used indiscriminately.

There is no quiescent final vowel.

A

A has three sounds.

(1). The first is both long and short; long, like a in the English words far, star; as 'àr' slaughter, 'àth' a ford, 'gràdh' love, 'sàruich' oppress: short, like a in that; as 'cath' a battle, 'alt' a joint, 'abuich' ripe.

(2). Both long and short, before dh and gh. This sound has none like it in English. Long; as 'adhlaiç' bury, adhradh' worship: short; as 'lagh' a law, 'magh' a field, adharc' a horn.

(3). Short and obscure, like e in mother; as 'an' 'a' the, 'ar' our, 'ma' if; and in the plural termination 'a' or 'an'.

E

E has three sounds.

(1). Both long and short: long, like e in where, there; as 'è, sè' he, 'rè' during. This e is generally marked with a grave accent. Short, like e in met; as 'le' with, 'leth' half.

(2). Long; as 'ré' the moon, 'cé' the earth, 'an dé' yesterday. This e is always marked with an acute accent.

(3). Short like e in mother; as 'duine' a man, 'ccannuichte' bought.

I

I has two sounds.

(1). Both long and short, like ee in seem : long ; as 'min' smooth, 'right' a king : short ; as 'min' meal, 'erith' trembling.

(3). Both long and short, like (2) a : long ; as 'foghlum' learning : short ; as 'roghuinn' choice, 'logh' to forgive.

OF THE DIPHTHONGS.

There are thirteen Diphthongs reckoned in Gaelic ; ae, ai, ao, ea, ei, eo, eu, ia, io, iu, oi, ua, ui. Of these, ao, eu, ia, ua, are always long : the others are sometimes long, sometimes short.

AE

The sound of ae is made up of (1) a long, and (1) e short. This diphthong hardly occurs, except in 'Gael' a Gaid or Highlander, and 'Gaelic' the Gaelic language.

AI

The sound of ai is either made up of the sounds of both the vowels, or like that of the former.

2. Made up of (2) a and (1) i ; the a long the i short ; as 'saighdean' arrows.

Before a Lingual or Palatal, not quiescent, the i often loses its sound, and only serves to qualify the sound of the following consonant. Hence,

3. Like (1) a alone : long ; as 'fàisg' squeeze, 'fàilte' salutation : short ; as 'glàic' a hollow, 'tais' soft.

4. Like (2) a alone : short ; as 'airm' arms, 'gairm' a call.

3. Like (2) e : long, as 'caslan' sick ; short, as 'fead' whistle.

EU

The sound of eu is like (2) e alone ; long, as 'teum' to bite, 'gleus' trim, entertainment.

One of the most marked variations of Dialect occurs in the pronunciation of the diphthong eu ; which, instead of being pronounced like long e, is over all the North Highlands commonly pronounced like ia ; as 'nial, ian, fiar', for 'neul, eun, leur'.

2. Like (1) i; long, as 'iodhol' an idol; short, as 'crios' a girdele, 'biorach' pointed.

After a Lingual or a Palatal, not quiescent, the i sometimes loses its sound, and only qualifies that of the preceding consonant; hence,

3. Like u in sun, short and obscure, as 'cionta' guilt, 'tionndadh' to turn.

IU.

The sound of iu is either made up of the sound of both the vowels, or like u alone.

OF THE TRIPHTHONGS.

There are five Triphthongs, in each of which i is the last letter; aoi, cói, iai, iuí, uai. In these, the two first vowels have the same sounds and powers as when they form a Dipthong. The final i is sounded short; but before a Palatal or a Lingual, not quiescent, it loses its sound, and only qualifies that of the following consonant.

AOI

3. Like (1) ua: as 'uair' time, an hour, 'cluaise' of an ear.

OF THE POWERS OF THE CONSONANTS.

In treating of the consonants separately, it will be convenient to depart a little from the alphabetical order of the letters, and to consider first the Labials, next the Palatals, and lastly the Linguals.

LABIALS.

P

1. Plain. Like p in English; as 'poll' a pool, 'pill' return.

2. Aspirated. Like ph or f in English; as 'a' phuill' of the pool, 'phill' returned.

B

1. Plain. Like b in English: as 'baile' a town, 'beò' alive.

2. Aspirated. Like v in English; as 'bhuail' struck. In the end of a syllable, the articulation is sometimes feeble, and often passes into the vocal sound of u (i); as in 'marbh' dead, 'garbh' rough, 'dabhach' a vat.

M

1. Plain. Like m in English; as 'mac' a son, 'cam' crooked.

2. Aspirated. Somewhat like v in English, but more feeble and nasal; as 'mhàthair' O mother, 'làmh' the hand. The sound mh has the same relation to that of bh, as the sound of m has to that of b. Sometimes, like bh it becomes a vocal sound like a nasal u; as in 'damh' an ox, 'samhradh' summer; and sometimes the articulation becomes so feeble as not to be perceived; as 'còmhradh' speech, 'domhain' deep.

F

1. Plain. Like f in English; as 'faigh' get, 'fòid' a turf.

2. Aspirated. Quiescent; as 'fheara' O men. In 'fhuair' found, the aspiration is retained, and the word is pronounced as if written huair. It is probable that it was originally written and pronounced 'fuair'; that 'huair' is but a provincial pronunciation; and that to adapt the spelling, in some shape, to this pronunciation, the word came to be written 'fhuair'.

PALATALS AND LINGUALS.

In treating of the Diphthongs (ai, ea, ei, &c.) notice has been often taken of the powers of certain vowels in modifying the sound of the adjoining Consonants. This refers to a twofold mode of pronouncing the Palatal and Lingual Consonants, whether plain or aspirated. The difference between these two modes of pronunciation is, in some Consonants, abundantly striking; in others it is minute, but sufficiently discernible to an ear accustomed to the Gaelic. The one of these modes of articulation belongs to Palatals and Linguals, chiefly when connected with a broad vowel; the other belongs to them when connected with a small vowel. Hence, the former may be called the broad sound, the latter the small sound of a Palatal or a Lingual.

These sounds are not distinguished in writing, but may be known, for the most part, by the relative situation of the letters.

C

1. Plain. Broad: like c in come, curb; as 'cùl' the back, 'cridhe' the heart.

2. Small: like c in care, cure; as 'taic' support, 'circe' of a hen.

3. Aspirated. Broad: like the Greek  $\chi$ , as pronounced in Scotland, in  $\chi\alpha\upsilon\alpha$ ; as 'croch' hang, 'chaidh' went.

4. Small: like  $\chi$  in  $\chi\alpha\upsilon\alpha$ ; as 'ch' shall see, 'eich' horses.

G

1. Plain. Broad: like g in go, rogue; as 'gabh' to take, 'glòir' speech, 'bog' soft

2. Small: like g in give, fatigue; as 'gin' produce, 'thig' shall come, 'tilg' throw.

3. Aspirated. Broad: has no sound like it in English; as 'ghabh' took, 'ghlèidh' kept.

4. Small: Nearly like y in young; as 'ghin' produced.

5. Gh in the end of a syllable, is often quiescent; as 'righ' a king, 'tiugh' thick, 'fuirgeall' remainder.

T

1. Plain. Broad: nearly like t in tone, bottom; as 'tog' raise, 'trom' heavy, 'brat' a covering.

2. Small: like ch in cheek, choose; as 'tinn' sick, 'caillte' lost.

3. Aspirated. Like h in house; as 'thig' shall come, 'throisg' fasted, 'maith' good.

4. Quiescent; in the middle of a polysyllable; in the end of a long syllable; and in certain tenses of a few irregular verbs when preceded by d'; as 'smith-each' watery, 'sith' peace, 'an d' thug e?' did he give? also in the Pronoun 'thusa' thou.

D

1. Plain. Broad: nearly like d in done; as 'dol' going, 'diù' near, close, 'ciod' what.

2. Small: nearly like j in June, jewel; as 'diù' worth, 'maide' a stick, 'airde' height.

D, after ch is commonly sounded like c, as 'bochd' poor, pronounced as if written 'boche'.

3. Aspirated. Broad: like broad gh; as 'dhruid' did shut, 'gràdh' love.

4. Small: like small gh; as 'dheare' looked.

5. Quiescent; as 'fàidh' a prophet, 'cridhe' the heart; as 'ràdh' saying, 'bualadh' striking.

RULE. The consonants c, g, t, d, have their SMALL sound, when, in the same syllable, they are preceded, or immediately followed, by a SMALL VOWEL; in all other situations they have their BROAD sound.

S

1. Plain. Broad: like s in sun, this; as 'speal' a scythe, 'cas' a fool, 'sùil' an eye, 'sgian' a knife.

2. Small. Like sh in shower, rush; as 'bris' break, 'sèimh' quiet, 'sniomh' twine, 'stèidh' foundation.

3. Aspirated. Like h in him; as 'shuidh' sat, 'shram' snorted. Before l and n, it is almost, if not altogether, quiescent; as 'shlanuich' healed, 'shniomh' twisted. S followed by a mute consonant is never aspirated.

RULE. S has its SMALL sound, when, in the same syllable it is preceded or followed by a SMALL VOWEL, with or without an intervening Lingual. In all other situations it has its BROAD sound. EXCEPT, S is broad in 'is' am. It is broad in 'so' this, 'sud' yon. It is customary to give s its broad sound in the beginning of a word, when the former word ends with r, in which case the r also has its broad sound, as 'chuir sinn' we put, 'air son' on account.

OF L, N, R.

A distinction between a consonant when plain, and the same consonant when aspirated, has been easily traced thus far. This distinction readily discovers itself, not only in the pronunciation and orthography, but also (as will be seen in its proper place) throughout the system of inflection. It takes place uniformly in those consonants which have been already considered. With respect to the remaining linguals, l, n, r, a corresponding distinction will be found to take place in their pronunciation, and likewise in the changes they suffer by inflection. This close correspondence between the changes incident to l, n, r, and the changes which the other consonants undergo, seems to be a sufficient reason for still using the same discriminative terms in treating of their powers; though these terms may not appear to be so strictly applicable to these three consonants as to the rest. The powers of l, n, r, shall accordingly be explained under the divisions plain and aspirated, broad and small.

L

1. Plain. Broad; has no sound like it in English; 'lom' bare, 'labhair' speak, 'mall' slow, 'alt' a joint, 'alt' a brook, 'slat' a rod, 'dlù' near.

2. Small: like ll in million; as 'linn' an age, 'lion' fill, 'pill' return, 'sliche' a way.

3. Aspirated. Broad: like l in loom, fool; as 'labhair' spoke, 'lom' feminine of 'lom' bare, 'mòl' praise, 'dhlù' feminine of 'dlù' near.

4. Small: nearly like l in limb, fill; as 'a linn' his age, 'lion' filled, 'mil' honey, 'dligheach' due, lawful.

N

1. Plain. Broad; has no sound like it in English; 'nuadh' new, 'naisg' bind, 'lann' a blade, 'càrn' a heap of stones.

2. Small: like n in the second syllable of opinion;

as 'nigh' wash, 'binn' melodious, 'cùirn' heaps of stones.

3. Aspirated. Broad: like n in no, on; as 'nuadh' feminine of 'nuadh' new, 'naisg' bound, 'shnàmh' swam, 'sean' old, 'chon' of dogs, 'dàn' a poem.

4. Small: like n in keen, near; as 'nigh' washed, 'shnìomh' twisted, 'coin' dogs, 'dàim' poems.

In 'an' when followed by a Palatal, the n is pronounced like ng in English; as 'an gille' the lad, 'an còmhuidh' always.

N, after a mute, is in a few instances pronounced like r as in 'mnanth' women, 'cnatan' a cold, 'an t-snàth' of the yarn; pronounced 'mrathan, cratan,' &c.

R

1. Plain. Nearly like r in roar; as 'ruadh' reddish, 'righ' a king, 'ruith' run, 'tòrr' a heap, 'ceartas' justice.

2. Aspirated. Broad: nearly like ral r in rear; as 'car' a turn, 'ruith' ran, 'mòr' great.

3. Small: has no sound like it in English; 'a rìgh' O king, 'scirbhe' satiety, 'mòir' gen. of 'mòr' great.

RULE, L, N, R, have their PLAIN sound when, in the same syllable, they are immediately preceded by a plain Liquid, or immediately followed by a plain Lingual; also in the beginning of certain cases and tenses; in all other situations, they have their ASPIRATED sound. They have their SMALL sound when, in the same syllable, they are preceded or followed by a small vowel, with or without an intervening Liquid; in other situations, they have their BROAD sound.

H

H is never used as an independent radical letter. When prefixed to a word beginning with a vowel, it is pronounced like h in how; as 'na h-òighean' the virgins, 'na h-oidhe' of the night.

PART II.

OF THE PARTS OF SPEECH.

THE parts of speech in Gaelic may be conveniently divided and arranged as follows: Article, Noun, Adjective, Pronoun, Verb, Adverb, Preposition, Conjunction, Interjection. Of these, the first five are declinable: the other four are indeclinable.

CHAP. I.—OF THE ARTICLE.

THE Gaelic Article 'an' corresponds to the English definite article the. There is in Gaelic no indefinite article corresponding to the English a or an. The inflections of the article are but few. They depend on the gender, the number, and the case, of the noun to which it is prefixed. Hence the article is declined by gender, number, and case, as follows:

Singular.		Plural.
masc.	fem.	masc. &amp; fem.
Nom. an, am	an, a'	na
Gen. an, a'	na	nan, nam
Dat. an, a', 'n	an, a', 'n	na

In the singular, final n of the article is sometimes cut off, and its absence marked by an apostrophe. The same happens to the initial a of the dative singular.

CHAP. II.—OF NOUNS.

A NOUN is the Name of any person, object, or thing whatsoever, that we have occasion to mention. In treating of this Part of Speech, we have to consider the Gender and the Declension of Nouns.

OF GENDER.

The following observations may serve to give some idea of the analogy of gender in Gaelic nouns; though they do not furnish a complete set of rules sufficient to ascertain the gender of every noun.

MASCULINES. Nouns signifying males are masculines; as ‘fear’ a man, ‘rìgh’ a king, ‘sagart’ a priest, ‘tarbhl’ a bull, ‘cù’ a dog.

Many nouns, signifying the young of animals of either Sex, are masculine, even when the individual objects they denote are mentioned as being of the female Sex; as ‘laogh’ a calf, ‘isean’ a chicken, ‘uan’ a lamb, &c.

Diminutives in an; as ‘rothan’ a little wheel, ‘dealgan’ a little pin, &c.

Derivatives in as, which are, for the most part, abstract nouns; as ‘càirdeas’ friendship, ‘naimhdeas’ enmity, ‘cùineas’ calmness, ‘breitheanas’ judgment, ‘ceartas’ justice, ‘maithcas’ goodness, &c.

Derivatives in air, ach, iche, which are, for the most part, agents; as ‘cealgair’ a deceiver, ‘sealgair’ a huntsman, ‘dorsair’ a door-keeper, ‘marcaich’ a rider, ‘maraiche’ a sailor, ‘coisiche’ a foot-traveller, &c.

Names of such kinds of trees as are natives of Scotland; as ‘darach’ oak, ‘giubhas’ fir, ‘uinneann’ ash.

Most polysyllables whereof the last vowel is broad, are masculine.

FEMININES. Nouns signifying females are feminine; as ‘bean’ a woman, ‘màthair’ a mother, ‘bò’ a cow, &c. Except ‘haininnnach’ or ‘hoirionnach’ a female, ‘mart’ a cow, ‘capull’ a horse or mare, but commonly a mare, which are masculine; and ‘caillin’ a damsel, masculine or feminine.

Some nouns denoting a species are feminine, even when the individual spoken of is characterised as a male; as ‘gabhar fhùirionn’ a he-goat.

Names of countries; as ‘Albainn’ Scotland, ‘Èirinn’ Ireland.

Names of musical instruments; as ‘clàrsach’ a harp, ‘piob’ a pipe.

Names of the heavenly bodies; as ‘Grian’ sun, ‘Gealach’ moon.

Names of diseases; as ‘teasach’ a fever, ‘a’ ghriùthach’ the measles, ‘a’ bhreac’ the small-pox, ‘a’ bhuidheach’ the jaundice, ‘a’ bhluinneach’ a diarrhoea, &c.

Collective names of trees or shrubs are feminine; as ‘giùbsach’ a fir wood, ‘iùbrach’ a yew copse, ‘seileach’ a willow copse, ‘droighneach’ a thorny brake.

Diminutives in ag; as ‘caileag’ a girl, ‘cuachag’ a little cup.

Derivatives in achd; as ‘iomlanachd’ fulness, ‘doilleireachd’ duskiness, ‘doimhneachd’ depth, ‘rioghachd’ kingdom, ‘sinnsireachd’ ancestry, &c.

Abstract nouns formed from the genitive of adjectives; as ‘doille’ blindness, ‘gile’ whiteness, ‘leisg’ laziness, ‘buidhre’ deafness, &c.

Many monosyllables in ua followed by one or more consonants are feminine; as ‘bruaich’ a bank, ‘cruach’ a heap, ‘cuach’ a cup, ‘cluas’ an ear, ‘gruag’ the hair of the head, ‘sguab’ a shaft, ‘tuath’ a hatchet, ‘tuath’ peasantry.

Almost all polysyllables, whereof the last vowel is small, except those in air and iche, already noticed, are feminine.

A few nouns are of either gender; ‘Salm’ a Psalm, ‘creidimh’ belief, are used as masculine nouns in some places, and feminine in others. ‘Cruinne’ the globe, ‘talamh’ the earth, land, are masculine in the nominative; as ‘an cruinne-cè’ the globe of the earth. The same nouns are generally feminine in the genitive; as ‘gu crìch na cruinne’ to the extremity of the world, ‘aghaidh na talmhainn’ the face of the earth.

OF DECLENSION.

Nouns undergo certain changes significant of Number and of Relation.

The forms significant of Number are two: the Singular, which denotes one; and the Plural, which denotes any number greater than one.

The changes expressive of Relation are made on nouns in two ways: 1. On the beginning of the noun; 2. On its termination. The relations denoted by changes on the termination are different from those denoted by changes on the beginning; they have no necessary connection together; the one may take place in absence of the other. It seems proper therefore to class the changes on the termination by themselves in one division, and give it a name; and to class the changes on the beginning also by themselves in another division, and give it a different name. As the changes on the termination denote, in general, the same relations which are denoted by the Greek and Latin cases; that seems a sufficient reason for adopting the term Case into the Gaelic Grammar, and applying it, as in the Greek and Latin, to signify ‘the changes made on the termination of nouns or adjectives to mark relation.’

According to this description of them, there are four cases in Gaelic. These may be named, like the corresponding cases in Latin, the Nominative, the Genitive, the Dative, and the Vocative. The Nominative is used when any person or thing is mentioned as the subject of a proposition or question, or as the object of an action or affection. The Genitive corresponds to an English noun preceded by of. The Dative is used only after a preposition. The Vocative is employed when a person or thing is addressed.

The changes on the beginning of nouns are made by aspirating an initial consonant; that is, writing h after it. This may be called the Aspirated form of the noun. The aspirated form extends to all the cases and numbers. A noun, whereof the initial form is not changed by aspiration, is in the Primary form.

The accidents of nouns may be briefly stated thus. A noun is declined by Number, Case, and Initial form. The Numbers are two; Singular and Plural. The Cases are four; Nominative, Genitive, Dative, and Vocative. The Initial form is twofold; the Primary form; and the Aspirated form peculiar to nouns beginning with a consonant.

In declining nouns, the formation of the cases is observed to depend more on the last vowel of the nominative than on the final letter. Hence the last vowel of the nominative, or in general of any declinable word, may be called the characteristic vowel. The division of the vowels into broad and small suggests the distribution of nouns into two Declensions, distinguished by the quality of the characteristic vowel. The first Declension comprehends those nouns whereof the characteristic vowel is broad; the second Declension comprehends those nouns whereof the characteristic vowel is small.

The following examples are given of the inflection of nouns of the Formation of the Cases of Nouns of the First Declension.

Singular Number.

General Rule for forming the Genitive.—The Genitive is formed from the Nominative, by inserting i after the characteristic vowel: as 'bàs' mas. death, Gen. sing. 'bàis'; 'fuaran' m. a fountain, g. s. 'fuarain'; 'clàrsach' f. a harp, g. s. 'clàrsaich.' Feminine monosyllables often also add a short e to the Nominative; as 'cluas' f. an ear, g. s. 'cluaise'; 'làmh' a hand, g. s. 'lámhe.'

Particular Rules for the Genitive.

1. If the nominative ends in a vowel, the genitive is like the nominative, as 'trà' m. a time or season, g. s. 'trà'; so also 'beatha' f. life, 'crò' m. a sheep-fold, 'cliù' m. fame, 'duine' a man. Except 'bò' f. a cow, g. s. 'boin'; 'cù' m. a dog, g. s. 'coim'; 'brù' f. the belly, g. s. 'bronn'.

2. Nouns ending in chd or rr have the genitive like the nominative; as 'uchd' m. the breast, 'slochd' m. offspring, 'feachd' f. a host, 'reachd' m. statute, 'beachd' m. vision, 'smachd' m. authority, 'fuachd' m. cold, 'sprochd' m. gloom, 'beannachd' m. a blessing, 'naombachd' f. holiness, 'càrr' m. the tail, 'tòrr' m. a heap. Except 'slochd' g. s. sluchd m. a pit, unless this word should rather be written 'sloc,' like 'hoc, enoc, soc.'

3. Monosyllables ending in gh or th add a for the genitive, as 'lagh' m. lace, g. s. 'lagha'; 'roth' m. a wheel, g. s. 'rotha'; 'sruth' m. a stream, g. s. 'srutha.' Except 'àgù' m. felicity, grace, or charm, g. s. 'àigh'.

4. Monosyllables characterized by io either drop the o or add a for the genitive; as 'siol' m. seed, g. s. 'sil'; 'lion' m. a net, g. s. 'lin'; 'crioch' f. a boundary, g. s. 'criche'; 'ciòch' f. the pap, g. s. 'ciche'; 'fion' m. wine, g. s. 'fiona'; 'crios' m. a girdle, g. s. 'criosa'; 'fiòdh' m. timber, g. s. 'fiodha.' Except 'Criosd' m. Christ, which has the genitive like the nominative.

5. Many monosyllables, whose characteristic vowel is a or o, change it into u and insert i after it; as 'gol' m. the bill of a bird, g. s. 'guib'; 'crodh' m. kine, g. s. 'cruidh'; 'bolg' or 'balg' m. a bag, g. s. 'builg'; 'clog' or 'clag' m. a ball, g. s. 'cluig'; 'lorg' f. a staff, g. s. 'luirg'; 'long' f. a ship, g. s. 'luinge'; 'alt' m. a joint, g. s. 'uilt'; 'allt' m. a rivulet, g. s. 'uillt'; 'car' m. a turn, g. s. 'cuir'; 'càrn' m. a heap of stones, g. s. 'cùirn.' So also 'ceòl' m. music, g. s. 'ciùil'; 'seòl' m. a sail, g. s. 'stùil.' Except nouns in on and a few feminines, which follow the general rule: as 'bròn' m. sorrow, g. s. 'bròin'; 'lòn' m. food, g. s. 'lòin'; 'cloch' or 'clach' f. a stone, g. s. 'cloiche'; 'cos' or 'cas' f. the foot, g. s. 'coise'; 'bròg' f. a shoe, g. s. 'bròige.' So also 'clann' f. children, g. s. 'cloinne'; 'crann' m. a tree, g. s. 'croinn.' 'Mac' m. a son, has its g. s. 'mic.'

6. Polysyllables characterized by ea change ea into i; as 'fitheach' m. a raven, g. s. 'fithich'; 'caill-each' f. an old woman, g. s. 'caillich.' These two suffer a syncope, and add e; 'buidheann' f. a company, g. s. 'buidhne'; 'sithionn' f. renison, g. s. 'sithne.'

Of monosyllables characterized by ea, some throw away a and insert i; as 'cach' m. a horse, g. s. 'eich' 'fearg' f. anger, g. s. 'feirge'.—Some change ea into i; as 'breac' m. a trout, g. s. 'bric'; 'fear' m. a man, g. s. 'fir'; 'ceann' m. a head, end, g. s. 'cinn'; 'preas' m. a bush, g. s. 'pris'; 'breac' f. the small-pox, g. s. 'brice'; 'ceare' f. a hen, g. s. 'circe'; 'leac' f. a flag, g. s. 'lic'. 'Gleann' m. a valley, adds e, g. s. 'glinne'.—Some add a to the nominative; as 'speal' m. a scalthe, g. s. 'speala'. 'Dream' f. people, race; 'gean' m. honour; have their genitive like the nominative. 'Gèadh' m. a goose, makes g. s. 'gèidh'.

7. Nouns in eu followed by a liquid, change u into o and insert i after it; as 'neul' m. a cloud, g. s. 'neòil'; 'eun' m. a bird, g. s. 'còin'; 'feur' m. grass, g. s. 'feoir'; 'meur' m. a finger, g. s. 'meoir'; 'leus' m. a tooth, g. s. 'leòis'. 'Beul' m. the mouth, g. s. 'béil' or 'beòil'; 'sgeul' m. a tale, g. s. 'sgéil' or 'sgéòil'. Other nouns characterized by eu add a for the gen. as 'treud' m. a flock, g. s. 'treuda'; 'feum' m. use, need, g. s. 'feuma'; 'beum' m. a stroke, g. s. 'beuma'. 'Meud' m. bulk, 'beuc' m. a roar, 'freumb' f. a fibre, root, hardly admit of a, but have their gen. rather like the nom.

8. Monosyllables characterized by ia change ia into ei; as 'sliabh' m. a moor, g. s. 'sléibh'; 'fiadh' m. a deer, g. s. 'féidh'; 'biadh' m. food, g. s. 'béidh' or 'bidh'; 'iasg' m. fish, g. s. 'cìsg'; 'grian' f. the sun, g. s. 'gréine'; 'sgiath' f. a wing, g. s. 'sgéithe'. Except 'Dia' m. God, g. s. 'Dú'; 'sgian' f. a knife, g. s. 'sgine'.

'Piuthar' f. a sister, has g. s. 'peathar'; 'leanabh' m. a child, g. s. 'leinibh'; 'leabaidh' or 'leaba' f. a bed, g. s. 'leapa'; 'talamh' m. earth, g. s. 'talmhainn'.

The Dative singular of masculine nouns is like the nominative; of feminine nouns, is like the genitive; as 'tobar' m. a well, d. s. 'tobar'; 'clàrsach' f. a harp, g. s. and d. s. 'clàrsaich'; 'misneach' f. courage, g. s. and d. s. 'misnich'.

Particular Rules for the Dative of Feminine Nouns.

1. If e was thrown to the nominative in forming the genitive, it is added to the dative; as 'slat' f. a rod, g. s. 'slaite' d. s. 'slait'; 'grian' f. the sun, g. s. 'gréine' d. s. 'gréin'.

2. If the nominative suffered a syncope in forming the genitive, or if the last vowel of the genitive is broad, the dative is like the nominative; as 'buidheann' f. a company, g. s. 'buidhne' d. s. 'buidheann'; 'piuthar' f. a sister, g. s. 'peathar' d. s. 'piuthar'.

The Vocative of masculine nouns is like the genitive; of feminine nouns is like the nominative; as 'bàs' m. death, g. s. 'bàis' v. s. 'bhàis'; 'cu' m. a dog, g. s. 'còin' v. s. 'clòin'; 'grian' f. the sun, v. s. 'ghrian'; 'gaoth' f. the wind, v. s. 'ghaoth'.

Plural Number.

Nominative. Masculine nouns which insert i in the gen. sing. have their nom. plur. like the gen. sing.; as 'oglach' m. a servant, g. s. 'òglach' n. p. 'òglach'; 'fear' m. a man, g. s. and n. p. 'fir'. Many of these form their nom. plur. also by adding a short a, or, an to the nominative singular. Other masculine nouns, and all feminine nouns, have their nom. plural in a, to which n is added, euphonic causa, before an initial vowel.

Particular Rules for forming the Nominative Plural in a or an.

1. By adding a to the nominative singular; as 'dubhar' m. a shadow, n. p. 'dubhara'; 'rioghachd' f. a kingdom, n. p. 'rioghachdan'. Under this Rule, some nouns suffer a syncope; as 'dorus' m. a door, n. p. 'dorsa' for 'dorusa'.

2. Nouns ending in l or nn, often insert t before a; as 'reul' m. a star, n. p. 'reultan' 'sàil' f. a heel, n. p. 'sàiltean'. So 'lòn' m. a marsh, n. p. 'lòinteàn'.

3. Some nouns in ar drop the a, and add to the nominative singular the syllable aich; and then the final a becomes e, to correspond to the preceding small vowel; as 'leabhar' m. a book, n. p. 'leabhraichean'; 'tobar' m. a well, n. p. 'tobraichean'; 'Piuthar' f. a sister, from the g. s. 'peathar', has n. p. 'peathraichean'; so 'leaba' f. a bed, g. s. 'leapa' n. p. 'leapaichean'. 'Bata' m. a staff, n. p. 'batacha'; 'là' or 'latha' a day, n. p. 'lathachan' or 'làithean'.

4. Some polysyllables in ach add e or ean to the genitive singular; as 'mullach' m. summit, g. s. 'mullaich' n. p. 'mullaichean'; 'òtrach' m. a dough-hill, n. p. 'òtraichean'; 'clàrsach' f. a harp, n. p. 'clàrsaichean'; 'deudach' m. the jaw, n. p. 'deudaichean'. So 'sliabh' m. a moor, g. s. 'sléibh', with t inserted, n. p. 'sléibhteàn'. 'Sabhal' m. a baron, g. s. 'sabhail', n. p. 'saibhlean', contracted for 'sabhailleàn'.

The following Nouns form their Nominative Plural irregularly: 'Dia' m. God, n. p. 'déce' or 'diathan'; 'sgian' f. a knife, n. p. 'sgeana' or 'sginichean'; 'sluagh' m. people, n. p. 'sloigh'; 'bò' f. a cow, n. p. 'bà'.

Genitive. 1. Monosyllables, and nouns which form their nominative plural like the genitive singular, have the genitive plural like the nominative singular; as 'geug' f. a branch, g. p. 'geug'; 'coimhearsnach' m. a neighbour, g. s. and n. p. 'coimhearsnaich', g. p. 'coimhearsnach'.

2. Polysyllables which have their nominative plural in a or an, form the genitive like the nominative; 'leabhar' m. a book, n. p. and g. p. 'leabhraichean'.—When the nominative plural is twofold, the genitive is so too; as 'fear' m. a man, n. p. 'fir', or sometimes 'feara', g. p. 'fear' or 'feara'.

‘Cù’ m. a dog, has its g. p. ‘con’; caora’ f. a sheep, g. p. ‘caorach’; ‘sluagh’ m. people, g. p. ‘sluagh’ or ‘slògh.’

Dative. 1. The dative plural is formed either from the nominative singular or from the nominative plural. If the nominative plural ends in a consonant, the dative plural is formed by adding ibh to the nominative singular; as ‘crann’ m. a tree, n. p. ‘croinn’, d. p. ‘crannaibh’; ‘mac’ m. a son, n. p. ‘mic’ d. p. ‘macaibh.’—If the nominative plural ends in a vowel, the final vowel is changed into ibh; as ‘tobar’ a well, n. p. ‘tobraichean’, d. p. ‘tobraicibh.’

2. Monosyllables ending in an aspirated consonant, which have their nominative plural like the genitive singular, form their dative plural like the nominative plural; as ‘damh’ an ox, g. s. and n. p. ‘daimh’ d. p. ‘daimh’ not ‘daimhaibh’; ‘fiadh’ m. a deer, g. s. and n. p. and d. p. ‘fíidh.’ So ‘sluagh’ m. people, host, g. s. ‘sluaigh’, n. p. and d. p. ‘slòigh.’—Nouns ending in ch, of three or more syllables, form their dative plural like the nominative plural, rather than in ibh; as ‘coimhearsnach’ m. a neighbour, d. p. ‘coimhearsnach’ rather than ‘coimhearsnachaidh’; ‘Phàriseach’ m. a Pharisee, d. p. ‘phàiriseich’ rather than ‘phàriseachaidh.’

Vocative. The vocative plural is like the nominative plural, terminating in a, but seldom in an; as ‘fear’ m. a man, n. p. ‘fir’ or ‘feara’, v. p. ‘flicara’; ‘òglach’ m. a servant, n. p. ‘òglacha’, v. p. ‘òglacha.’ Except perhaps monosyllables which never form their nominative plural in a, nor their dative plural in ibh; as ‘damh’ m. an ox, n. p. ‘daimh’, v. p. ‘daimh’; ‘a shlòigh.’

The irregular noun ‘Bean’ f. a woman, is declined thus:

General Rule for the Genitive. The genitive of polysyllables is like the nominative; of monosyllables is made by adding e to the nominative; as ‘caraid’ m. a friend, g. s. ‘caraid’; ‘aimsir’ f. time, g. s. ‘aimsir’; ‘tigh’ m. a house, g. s. ‘tigh’e’; ‘aimn’ m. a name, g. s. ‘aimne’; ‘im’ m. butter, g. s. ‘ime’.

Particular Rules for the Genitive.

1. Feminine nouns in ail and air, frequently drop the i and add ach; if the nominative be a polysyllable, ai is thrown away; as ‘liuir’ f. a mare, g. s. ‘lärach’; ‘cathair’ f. a seat, g. s. ‘cathrach’ or ‘nathair’ f. a serpent, g. s. ‘nathrach’; ‘lasair’ f. a flame, g. s. ‘lasrach.’ To these add ‘coir’ f. right, g. s. ‘còrach’ or ‘còire.’

2. Monosyllables characterized by oi often drop i and add a; as ‘feòil’ f. flesh, g. s. ‘feòla’.

3. Monosyllables characterized by ui change ui into a or o, and add a; as ‘muir’ f. the sea, g. s. ‘mara’; ‘fuil’ f. blood, g. s. ‘fola’ or ‘fala’; ‘druim’ f. a ridge, g. s. ‘droma.’ Except ‘sùil’ f. the eye, g. s. ‘sùla’; ‘cuid’ f. a part, g. s. ‘codach’ or ‘cuid.’

4. A few feminine polysyllables in cir form their genitive like monosyllables; as ‘suipeir’ f. supper, g. s. ‘suipeire.’

5. The following dissyllables seem to have formed their genitive like monosyllables, and then suffered a contraction. Sometimes the characteristic vowel is retained, and sometimes it is thrown away; the final e of the genitive being converted into a, when requisite to suit an antecedent broad vowel.

Amhainn f. a river , g. s. ainhne, contr. for amhainne
Aghainn } f. a pan , g. s. aighne, _____	aghainne
Aghann }
Banais f. a wedding , g. s. bainne, _____	banaise
Dùthaich f. a country , g. s. dùtcha, _____	dùthaiche
Fiaicil f. a tooth , g. s. fiacla, _____	fiacaile
Gamhuinn m. a steer , g. s. gamhna, _____	gamhuinne
Maduinn f. morning , g. s. maidne, _____	madainne
Obair f. work , g. s. oibre, _____	obaire

6. The following nouns form their genitive by dropping the characteristic small vowel; ‘athair’ m. a father, g. s. ‘atar’; ‘màthair’ f. a mother, g. s. ‘màthar’; ‘bràthair’ m. a brother, g. s. ‘bràthlar’; ‘Cnàimh’ f. a bone, g. s. ‘cnàmha’; ‘uaimh’ f. a care, g. s. ‘uamha.’ ‘Mil’ f. honey, has g. s. ‘meala.’

7. A few monosyllables ending in a vowel have their genitive like the nominative; as ‘nì’ m. a thing, ‘tì’ m. a person, ‘rè’ m. the moon.

Dative. The dative singular is like the nominative tive; as 'duine' m. a man, d. s. 'duine', 'maduinn' f. morning, d. s. 'maduinn.'

Vocative. The vocative singular is like the nominative; as 'caraid' m. friend, v. s. 'charaid'; 'máthair' f. mother, v. s. 'mháthair.'

Plural Number.

Nominative.—General Rule. The nominative plural is formed by adding to the nominative singular a or an, written e or ean to correspond to a preceding small vowel; as 'piobair' m. a pipe, n. p. 'piobairean'; 'aimsir' f. time, season, n. p. 'aimsirean.'—Some nouns suffer a contraction in the nominative plural; as 'caraid' m. a friend, n. p. 'cáirdean'; 'námhaid' m. an enemy, n. p. 'námhdean'; 'fiacail' f. a tooth, n. p. 'fiacalan.'

Particular Rules. 1. Some nouns, whose last consonant is l or n, insert t in the nominative plural; as 'tuil' f. a flood, n. p. 'tuiltean'; 'smuain' f. thought, n. p. 'smuaintean'; 'coille' f. a wood, n. p. 'coilltean'; 'áithne' f. a command, n. p. 'áithnteán.' The t is aspirated in 'dail' f. a plain, n. p. 'dailthean'; 'sail' f. a beam, n. p. 'sailthean.'

2. Some nouns in air, chiefly such as form their genitive singular in ach, retain the same syllable in the nominative plural, and insert i after a; as Cathair, f. a seat, g. s. cathrach, n. p. cathraichean.

Lasair, f. a flame, g. s. lasrach, n. p. lasraichean.

Nathair, f. a serpent g. s. nathrach, n. p. nathraichean.

So also 'cuid' f. a part, from the g. s. 'codach', has the n. p. 'codachéan'; 'athair' m. a father, n. p. 'aithrichean'; 'máthair' f. a mother, n. p. 'máthraichean.' To which add 'amhainn' f. a river, n. p. aimhnichean; 'uisge' m. water, n. p. 'uisgeachan'; 'cridhe' m. the heart, n. p. 'cridheachan.'

The following nouns form their nominative plural irregularly; 'duine' m. a man, n. p. 'daoine'; 'rígh' m. a king, n. p. 'ríghre'; 'ní' m. a thing, n. p. 'níthe'; 'cliathuinn' m. a son-in-law, or brother-in-law, n. p. 'cleamhnan.'

Genitive. The genitive plural of monosyllables and masculine polysyllables, is twofold, both like the nominative singular, and like the nominative plural; as 'rígh' m. a king, g. p. 'rígh' or 'ríghre.' The genitive plural of feminine polysyllables is like the nominative plural only; as 'amhainn' f. a river, g. p. 'ainhnichean.'—'Súil' f. the eye has its g. p. 'sùil.'

Dative. The dative plural is formed from the nominative plural by changing the final vowel into ibh; as 'cridhe' m. the heart, n. p. 'cridheacha', d. p. 'cridheachaibh.'

Vocative. The vocative plural is like the nominative plural; as 'duine' m. a man, n. p. 'daoine', v. p. 'dhaoine.'

Final a or e in all the singular cases of polysyllables is occasionally cut off, especially in verse; as 'leab' bed, 'teang' tongue, 'coil' wood, 'cridh' heart.

Of the Initial form of Nouns.

In nouns beginning with a consonant, all the cases admit of the aspirated form. In the vocative singular and plural the aspirated form alone is used; except in nouns beginning with a lingual, which are generally in the primary form, when preceded by a lingual; as 'a sheann duine' old man. Nouns beginning with s followed by a mute consonant have no aspirated form, because s in that situation does not admit of the aspirate. In nouns beginning with l, n, r, a distinction is uniformly observed in pronouncing the initial consonant, corresponding precisely to the distinction of primary and aspirated forms in nouns beginning with other consonants. This distinction has already been fully stated in treating of pronunciation.

The general use of the singular and plural numbers has been already mentioned. A remarkable exception occurs in the Gaelic. When the numerals 'fichead' twenty, 'ceud' a hundred, 'míl' a thousand, are prefixed to a noun; the noun is not put in the plural, but in the singular number, and admits no variation of case. The termination of a noun preceded by 'dà' two, is the same with that of the dative singular, except when the noun is governed in the genitive case, and then it is put in the genitive plural; when preceded by 'fichead', 'ceud', &c. the termination is that of the nominative singular; thus, 'dà lámh' two hands, 'da chluais' two ears, 'dà bhear' two men, 'fichead lámh' twenty hands, 'ceud fear' a hundred men, 'míl caora' a thousand sheep, 'deich míle bliadhna' ten thousand years.

CHAP. III.—OF ADJECTIVES.

AN Adjective is a word used along with a noun, to express some quality of the person or thing signified by the noun.

Adjectives undergo changes which mark their relation to other words. These changes are made, like those on nouns, partly on the beginning, and partly on the termination; and may be fitly denominated by the same names. The changes on the beginning are made by aspirating an initial consonant. The numbers and cases, like those of nouns, are distinguished by changes on the termination. The gender is marked partly by the initial form, partly by the termination.

Adjectives whereof the characteristic vowel is broad, follow, in most of their inflections, the form of nouns of the first declension; and may be termed Adjectives of the first declension. Those adjectives whereof the characteristic vowel is small, may be called Adjectives of the second declension.

EXAMPLE OF ADJECTIVES OF THE FIRST DECLENSION.

Mòr, great.

Singular.		Plural.
Masc.	Femín.	Common Genđ.
Nom. Mòr,	Mhòr,	Mòra.
Gen. Mhòir,	Mhòire,	Mòra.
Dat. Mòr,	Mhòir,	Mòra.
Voc. Mhòir,	Mhòr,	Mòra.

Formation of the Cases of Adjectives of the First Declension.

Singular.

Nominative. The feminine gender is, in termination, like the masculine.

The other cases, both masc. and fem. are formed from the nominative, according to the Rules already given for forming the cases of nouns of the first declension. Take the following examples in adjectives.

Genitive.—General Rule. ‘Marbh’ dead, g. s. m. ‘mhairbh’ f. ‘mairbhe’; ‘dubh’ black, g. s. m. ‘dhuibh’ f. ‘duibhe’; ‘fadalach’ tedious, g. s. m. ‘fhadalaiich’ f. ‘fadalaich’.

Particular Rules. 1. ‘Sona’ happy, g. s. m. ‘shona’ f. ‘sona’; ‘aosda’ aged, g. s. m. and f. ‘aosda’; ‘beò’ alive, g. s. m. ‘bheò’ f. ‘beò’.

2. ‘Bochd’ poor, g. s. m. ‘bhochd’ f. ‘bochd’; ‘gèarr’ short, g. s. m. ‘ghèarr’ f. ‘gèarr’.

3. ‘Breagh’ fine, g. s. m. ‘bhreagha’ f. ‘breagha’.

4. ‘Crìon’ little, diminutive, g. s. m. ‘chrìn’ f. ‘crìne’.

5. ‘Donn’ brown, g. s. m. ‘dhuinn’ f. ‘duinne’; ‘gorm’ blue, g. s. m. ‘ghorm’ f. ‘guirme’; ‘lom’ bare, g. s. m. ‘lòm’ f. ‘luime’.—But dall’ blind, g. s. m. ‘dhoill’ f. ‘doille’; ‘mall’ slow, g. s. m. ‘mhoill’ f. ‘moille’; like the nouns ‘crann, clann’.

6. ‘Cinnteach’ certain, g. s. m. ‘chinntich’ f. ‘cinntich’; ‘maiseach’ beautiful, g. s. m. ‘mhaisich’ f. ‘maisich’.—‘Teare, rare, g. s. m. ‘theirc’ f. ‘teirce’; ‘dearg’ red, g. s. m. ‘dhearg’ f. ‘deirge’; ‘deas’ ready, g. s. m. ‘dheis’ f. ‘deise’.—‘Breac’ speckled, g. s. m. ‘bhrìc’ f. ‘brìc’; ‘geal’ white, g. m. ‘ghil’ f. ‘gile’.

7. ‘Geur’ sharp, g. s. m. ‘ghéir’ f. ‘géire’; like the nouns ‘breug, geug’.

8. ‘Liath’ hoary, g. s. m. ‘lèith’ f. ‘lèithe’; ‘dian’ keen, g. s. m. ‘dheìn’ f. ‘dèine’.

Irregulars. ‘Oidhar’ pale, g. s. m. and f. ‘uidhir’; ‘bodhar’ deaf, g. s. m. ‘bhuidhir’ f. ‘buidhir’.

Dative.—General Rule. ‘Uasal’ noble, d. s. m. ‘uasal’ f. ‘uasail’; ‘bodhar’ deaf, d. s. m. ‘bodhar’ f. ‘bhuidhir’.

Particular Rule. 1. ‘Trom’ heavy, d. s. m. ‘trom’ f. ‘thruim’.

Vocative. ‘Beag’ small, v. s. m. ‘bhig’ f. ‘bheag’.

Plural.

In Monosyllables the Plural, through all its Cases, is formed by adding a to the nom. sing.; in Polysyllables, it is like the nom. sing. as ‘crom’ crooked, pl. ‘croma’; ‘tuirseach’ melancholy, pl. ‘tuirseach’.

A few Dissyllables form their Plural like Monosyllables, and suffer a contraction; as ‘reamhar’ fat, pl. ‘reamhra’, contracted for ‘reamhara’.

ADJECTIVES OF THE SECOND DECLENSION.

All the Cases of Adjectives of the Second Declension are formed according to the General Rules for nouns of the second declension; that is, Monosyllables add e for the gen. sing. fem. and for the plural cases; Polysyllables are like the nom. sing. throughout.

In the second Declension, as in the first, Dissyllables sometimes suffer a contraction in the Plural; as ‘milis’ sweet, pl. ‘milse’ contracted for ‘milise’.

Of the Initial Form of Adjectives.

Adjectives admit the aspirated Form through all the Numbers and Cases. In Adjectives beginning with a Labial or a Palatal, the aspirated Form alone is used in the gen. and voc. sing. masc. the nom. dat. and voc. sing. feminine.

Comparison of Adjectives.

There are in Gaelic two forms of Comparison, which may be called the first and the second Comparative.

The first Comparative is formed from the gen. sing. mas. by adding e; as ‘geal’ white, g. s. m. ‘gìl’; comp. ‘gìle’; ‘ghile’; ‘ciotach’ guilty, g. s. m. ‘ciotaich’, comp. ‘ciotaiche’.—Some Adjectives suffer a contraction in the Comparative; as ‘bodhar’ deaf, comp. ‘buidhre’ for ‘buidhire’; ‘bòidheach’ pretty, comp. ‘bòidhiche’ for ‘bòidhiche’.

If the last letter of the gen. be a, it is changed into e, and i inserted before the last consonant; as ‘fada’ long, g. s. m. ‘fada’, comp. ‘faide’; ‘tana’ thin, g. s. m. ‘tana’, comp. ‘taine’.

The second Comparative is formed from the first, by changing final e into id; as ‘trom’ heavy, 1. comp. ‘truime’, 2. comp. ‘truimid’; ‘tiugh’ thick, 1. comp. ‘tiughe’, 2. comp. ‘tiughid’.

There are not many Adjectives which admit of the second Comparative. Both these forms of Comparison have an aspirated as well as a primary form, but are otherwise indeclinable.

The following Adjectives are compared irregularly.

Positive.	1. Comp.	2. Comp.
Maith, good ,	fèarr,	feàird.
Olc, bad, evil ,	miosa,	misd.
Mòr, great ,	mò,	mòid.
Beag, small ,	lugh,	lughaid.
Goirid, gèarr, short ,	giorra,	giorraid.
Duilich, difficult ,	dorra,
Teth, hot ,	teotha,
Leathan, broad ,	leatha,
Fagus, near ,	faisge,
Furas, easy ,	usadh.
Ionmhuinn, beloved ,	annsa.

To these may be added the noun.

Mòran, a great number or quantity, tuilleadh.

The Superlative, which is but a particular mode of expressing comparison, is the same in form with the first Comparative.

An eminent degree of any quality is expressed by putting one of the particles 'ro, glé,' before the Positive; as 'ro ghlic' very wise, 'glé gheal' very white. The same effect is produced by prefixing 'fìor' true, 'sàr' exceeding, &c. which words are, in that case, used adverbially; as 'fìor mhaiseach' truly beautiful, 'sàr mhaith' exceedingly good.

CHAP. IV.—OF PRONOUNS.

THE Pronouns are, for the most part, words used instead of nouns. They may be arranged under the following divisions: Personal, Possessive, Relative, Demonstrative, Interrogative, Indefinite, Compound.

The Personal Pronouns are those of the 1st, 2d, and 3d persons. They have a Singular and a Plural Number, a Simple and an Emphatic Form. They are declined thus:

Singular.
Simple Form.	Emphat. F.
1. Mì, mhi, I, me,	Mise, mhise.
2. { Tu, thu, thou,	} Tusa, thusa.
{ Thu, thee,
{ E, se, he,
3. { E, him,	} Esan.
{ I, sì, she,
{ I, her,
Plural.
Simple Form.	Emphat F.
1. Sinn, we, us,	Sinne.
2. Sibh, ye, you,	Sibhse.
3. { Iad, siad, they,	} Iadsan.
{ Iad, them,

The Pronoun 'sibh' you, of the plural number is used almost universally in addressing a single person of superior rank, or of greater age; while 'thu' thou, of the singular number is used in addressing an inferior or an equal. But the degree of seniority or of superiority, which is understood to entitle a person to this token of respect, varies in different parts of the Highlands. The Supreme Being is always addressed by the pronoun 'tu', or, 'thu', thou, of the singular number.

The Possessive Pronouns correspond to the Personal Pronouns; and, like them, may be called those of the 1st, 2d, and 3d persons singular, and 1st, 2d, and 3d persons plural. They have an Emphatic Form, which is made by connecting the syllable sa with the possessive pronoun of the 1st, 2d, and 3d persons singular, and 2d person plural; ne with that of the 1st person plural, and san with that of 3d person plural. These syllables are placed immediately after the nouns to which the possessive pronouns are prefixed, and connected by a hyphen.

These Pronouns are as follows:

Simple.	Emphatic.
Singular.
1. Mo, my,	mo mhac-sa.
2. Do, thy,	do mhac-sa.
3. { A, his,	} a mhac-sa, or, san.
{ A, her,
Plural.
1. Ar, our,	ar mac-nic.
2. Bhur, 'ur, your,	bhur mac-sa.
3. An, am, their,	an, am-sa, san.

If the noun be followed by an adjective, the emphatic syllable is affixed to the adjective; as 'do làmh gheal-sa' thy white hand.

The possessive pronouns, 'mo, do', when followed by a vowel, commonly lose the o, whose absence is marked by an apostrophe; as 'm' ainm' my name; 'd' athair' thy father. 'Do', thus abbreviated is frequently changed into, t'. The same pronouns when preceded by the preposition 'ann' in, suffer a transposition of their letters, and are written 'am, ad', one broad vowel being substituted for another; as 'ann ad chridhe' in thy heart, 'ann am aire' in my thoughts.

The possessive pronoun 'a' his, is often suppressed altogether after a vowel; as 'na samtaich bean do choimbearsnach, no oglach, no bhanoglach, no dhamh, no asal' covet not thy neighbours wife, or his manservant, or his maid-servant, &c. When thus omitted, its absence is marked by an apostrophe before the initial letter of the following noun, 'no 'oglach, no ' bhanoglach'.

The word 'fèin' corresponding to the English words self, own, is subjoined occasionally both to the personal and possessive pronouns; thus 'mì fèin' myself, 'mise fèin' I myself, 'thu fèin' thyself, 'thusa fèin' thou thyself, or thy own self; 'mo shluagh fèin' my own people.

The other Pronouns are as follows :

Relative.		Demonstrative.		Interrogative.
N. A, who, which, that.		So, this, these.		Co? who?
G. & D. An.		Sin, that, those.		Cia? which?
Nach, who not,		Sud, ud, you.		Ciod, creud,
				which not.
Na, that which,				what?
what.
Indefinite.		Compound.
Eigin, some.		E so, this one, m.		E sud, you one, m.
Geb'e } whoever.		I so, this one, f.		I sud, you one, f.
Ciab'e }
Eile, other.		Iad so, these.		Iad sud, you, pl.
Gach } each, every.		E sin, that one, m.		Càch eile, the rest.
Cach }
Càch, others, the rest.		Iad sin, those,		Cach a chéile,
Cuid, some.		each other.

CHAP. V.—OF VERBS.

The Verb in Gaelic, as in other languages, is declined by Voices, Moods, Tenses, Numbers, and Persons.

The Voices are two; Active and Passive.

The Moods are five; the Affirmative or Indicative, the Negative or Interrogative, the Subjunctive, the Imperative, and the Infinitive. Many, but not all Transitive Verbs have a Passive Participle.

The Tenses are three; the Present, the Preterite, and the Future.

The Numbers are two; Singular and Plural.

The Persons are three; First, Second, and Third.

The distinction of number and person take place only in a few tenses.

The inflections of Verbs, like those of nouns, are made by changes at the beginning, and on the termination.

The changes on the termination are made according to one model, and by the same rules. But for the sake of stating some diversity in the initial changes, it may be convenient to arrange the verbs in two conjugations: whereof the first comprehends those verbs which begin with a consonant; the second, those verbs which begin with a vowel. Verbs beginning with f, followed by a vowel are ranged under the second conjugation, along with verbs beginning with a vowel.

The verb ' Bi' be, which is used as an auxiliary to other verbs, is declined as follows :

Bi, be.

*Singular.*2 Ma bhitheas mi air bith, If I shall have been, &c.

The present affirmative 'ta' is now for most part written 'tha'. This is one of many instances where there appears a propensity in those who speak the Gaelic, to attenuate its articulations by aspiration. Another corrupt way of writing 'ta' which has become common, is 'ata'. This has probably taken its rise from uniting the relative to the verb; as 'an uair ata mi'; instead of 'an uair a ta', &c. 'mar a ta', &c. Or perhaps it may have proceeded from a too compliant regard to a provincial pronunciation.

The preterite negative 'robh' appears to be made up of the verbal particle 'ro', the same with 'do', and 'bha', throwing away the last vowel; 'ro bha, robh'.

The verb and pronoun of the 1st person singular, and 3d person plural, are frequently incorporated into one word, and written 'tairn', I am, 'taird' they are.

The present negative loses the initial bh after the particles 'cha' not, 'mur' if not, 'nach' that not; n is inserted, euphonic causa, betwixt the particle 'cha' and the verb; as 'cha 'n 'eil, mur 'eil, nach 'eil'. This Tense is often pronounced 'bcil' after the particle 'am'; as 'am beil e' is it?

Initial b of the future negative is aspirated after the particle 'cha' not; as 'cha bhi'.

Initial bh of the preterite subjunctive, loses the aspiration after the particles 'ni' not, 'mur' if not, 'nach' that not, 'gu' that, 'nam' if; as 'mur bithinn, nam bithheadh tu'.

The subjunctive and imperative often suffer a contraction, by changing ithea into io; as 'biom, bios, biodh' &c.

Some of the compound tenses of 'Bi' are rarely, if ever used. They are here given complete, because they correspond to the analogy of other verbs; and show how accurately the various modifications of time may be expressed by the substantive verb itself.

The Compound tenses may be easily learned from those of the Verb 'Buail' in the first Conjugation, being formed exactly in the same manner.

FORMATION OF THE TENSES.

Of the Initial Form.

An initial consonant is aspirated in the Preterite Tense, through all the Moods and Voices; except in the Preterite Subjunctive after the Particles 'ní, mur, nach, gu, an, am.' An Initial consonant is occasionally aspirated in the Future Tense, and in the Infinitive and Participle, indicating their connection with the preceding word.

In the first Conjugation, 'do' is prefixed to the Pret. Aff. and Neg. Active and Passive. However, it often is, and always may be, omitted before the Pret. Aff. It is sometimes omitted in the Pret. Neg. in verse, and in common conversation.—In the second Conjugation, the same Participle 'do' is prefixed to the Preterite through all the Moods and Voices, and to the Fut. Subj. excepting only the Subjunctive Tenses after 'ní, mur, nach, gu, an, am.' In this Conjugation, 'do' always loses the o to avoid a hiatus; and the d is aspirated in the Affirm. and Subjunct. Moods.

Of the Termination.

In all regular Verbs, the Terminations adjoined to the Root are, strictly speaking, the same in Verbs characterized by a broad vowel, and in Verbs characterized by a small vowel. But where the first vowel of the Termination does not correspond in quality to the last vowel of the Root, it has become the constant practice to insert in the Termination a vowel of the requisite quality, in order to produce this correspondence. Thus a variety has been introduced into the Terminations even of regular Verbs, prejudicial to the uniformity of inflection, and of no use to ascertain either the sense or the pronunciation. In the foregoing examples of regular Verbs, the common mode of Orthography has been followed; but in the following rules, the simple terminations only are specified.

ACTIVE VOICE.—Simple Tenses.

The Theme or Root of the Verb is always found in the second Person singular of the Imperative.

The Preterite Affirm. and Negat. is like the Root, and has no distinction of Number or Person. In most of the editions of the Gaelic Psalms, some inflections of the Preterite have been admitted, with good effect, from the Irish Verb; such as, 'bhuailear' I struck, 'bhualais' thou didst strike, 'bhuaileamar' we struck, 'bhuaileadar' they struck.—The Pret. Subj. is formed by adding to the Root inn for the first pers. sing. and adh for the other persons. The first pers. plur. also terminates in amaid.

The Future Affirm. adds idh to the Root; in the Negat. it is like the Root; and in the Subjunct. it adds as. A poetic Future Tense terminating in ann or om, is frequent in the Gaelic Psalms; as 'gair-ionn' will call, 'seasfann' will stand, 'do bheirionn' will give, &c. The Future has no distinction of Number or Person.

In the Imperative Mood, the second pers. sing. is the Root of the Verb. The other Persons are distinguished by these terminations; 1st pers. sing. am, 3d pers. sing. adh, 1st pers. plur. amaid, 2d pers. plur. ibh, 3d pers. plur. adh.

The terminations peculiar to the 1st pers. sing. and plur. of the Pret. Subj. and of the Imperat. supply the place of the Personal Pronouns; as does also the Termination of the 2d pers. plur. of the Imperative.

The Infinitive is variously formed.

General Rule. The Infinitive is formed by adding adh to the Root; as 'aom' bow, incline, Infin. 'aom-adh'; 'ith' eat, Infin. 'itheadh.'

1. Some verbs suffer a syncope in the penult syllable, and are commonly used in their contracted form; as

Compound Tenses.

The compound Tenses of the first order are made up of the several simple Tenses of the auxiliary verb 'Bi' be, and the Infinitive preceded by the Preposition 'ag' at. Between two Consonants, 'ag' commonly loses the g, and is written a'; as, 'tha iad a' dèanamh' they are doing. Between two Vowels, the a is dropped, and the g is retained; as, 'ta mi 'g iarraidh' I am asking. When preceded by a Consonant, and followed by a Vowel, the Preposition is written entire; as, 'ta iad ag iarraidh' they are asking. When preceded by a Vowel, and followed by a Consonant, it is often suppressed altogether; as, 'ta mi dèanamh' I am doing.

The compound Tenses of the second order are made up of the simple Tenses of 'Bi' and the Infinitive preceded by the Preposition 'air' after.

PASSIVE VOICE.

Simple Tenses.

The Preterite Affirm. and Negat. is formed from the same Tense in the Active, by adding adh. The Preter. Subj. adds teadh.

The Future is formed from the Fut. Act. by changing the Terminations in the Affirm. and Subj. into ar, (more properly far, as of old;) and adding the same syllable in the Negative.

The Imperative is formed from the Imperat. Act. by adding to the second pers. sing. tar, thar, or ar.

The Participle is formed by adding te to the Root.

There is no distinction of Number or Person in the Tenses of the Passive Voice.

Verbs which suffer a syncope in the Infinitive, suffer a like syncope in the Preter. Aff. and Neg. throughout the Future Tense, and in the Imperative.

Compound Tense.

The compound Tenses of the first order are made up of the simple Tenses of the auxiliary 'Bi', and the Passive Participle.

The compound Tenses of the second order are made up of the simple Tenses of 'Bi' and the Infinitive preceded by the Preposition 'air', and the Possessive Pronoun corresponding in Person to the Pronoun, or to the Noun, which is the Nominative to the verb.

USE AND IMPORT OF THE MOODS AND TENSES.

The Affirmative or Indicative Mood expresses affirmation, and is used in affirmative propositions only; as, 'do bhuail mi' I struck, 'bha mi a' bualadh' I was striking.

The Negative or Interrogative Mood is used in negative propositions and interrogative clauses, after the Particles 'ni' not, 'cha' not, 'nach' which not, that not, not? 'mur' if not; also, 'gu, gur' that, 'an, am' whether used relatively or interrogatively; as, 'cha d' fhlòlach mi' I did not hide, 'mur buail sinn' if we shall not strike, 'nach robh iad' that they were not, 'gu robh iad' that they were, 'am buail mi?' shall I strike?—It is used in the Future Tense after 'ged' although; as, 'ged bhuail e mi', though he strike me.

The Subjunctive Mood is used in the Preterite, either with or without conjunctions; as, 'bhuaillinn' I would strike, 'nam, mur, nach, &c. buaillinn' if, unless, &c. I should strike. In the Future it is used only after the conjunctions 'ma' if, 'o', 'o'n, since, and the Relative 'a' expressed or understood; as, 'ma bhuaileas mi' if I shall strike, 'am fear a bhuaill' cas mi' the man who will strike me, or the man whom I shall strike; 'an uair a bhuaileas mi' tra bhuaill' cas mi' the time [in] which I shall strike, i. e. when I shall strike; 'c'uin [Cia ùine] a bhuaileas mi?' what [is] the time [in] which I shall strike? i. e. when shall I strike?

The Imperative Mood expresses desire, whether purpose, command, or request; as, 'buaileam' let me strike, 'buaillibh' strike ye.

The Infinitive is, in all respects, a noun, denoting the action or energy of the verb, and commonly preceded by a Preposition which marks the time of the action; as, 'ag bualadh' at striking, 'am bualadh' the striking, the threshing. It assumes a regular genitive case, 'bualadh' g. s. 'bualaidh'; as 'urlar' 'bualaidh' a threshing floor.—The Infinitive sometimes loses the termination, and is regularly declined in its abridged form; thus, 'cruinnich' assemble, inf. 'cruinneachadh' per. apocop. 'cruinneach' g. s. 'cruinnich'.

The Infinitive Mood has been denominated in the present work, the present participle, from the consideration of its being regularly so used, preceded by the Preposition 'ag' at, and preceded by 'air' after, regularly corresponding with the past participle, as used in the English and Latin languages; as, 'ag bualadh' at striking, or striking; 'air bualadh' after striking, or struck.

Many words expressing state or action, take the Preposition ag before them, and may be considered as present participle Verbs, whereof the other parts are not in use; as, 'ag atharrais' mimicking, 'ag gair‘eachdaich’ laughing, ‘a’ fanoid, a’ magadh’ mocking, jeering.

The Participle passive is an adjective, denoting the completion of the action or energy expressed by the verb; as, ‘arbharr buailte’ threshed corn.

The Simple Tenses which belong to all verbs are the Preterite or Future; besides which the verb ‘Bì’ to be, and the defective verb ‘Is’ I am, have a Present Tense.

The Present expresses present existence, state, or energy.

The Preterite Affirmative and Negative expresses past time indefinitely. The Preterite Subjunctive corresponds to the English Tenses formed by the auxiliaries, would, could, &c. In general it denotes that the action or energy of the verb takes place eventually or conditionally. The Pret. Aff. or Neg. is used sometimes in this sense, like the English, when the Pret. Subj. occurred in the preceding clause of a sentence; as, ‘nam biodh tus’ an so, cha d’ fhuair mi ‘bhràthair bàs’ if thou hadst been here, my brother had not [would not have] died.

The Future marks future time indefinitely. This Tense is used in a peculiar sense in Gaelic, to signify that an action or event takes place uniformly, habitually, according to ordinary practice, or the course of nature. Thus; ‘blessed is he that considereth the ‘poor’ expressed according to the Gaelic idiom, would be, ‘blessed is he that will consider, &c. ‘A wise son maketh a glad father,’ in Gaelic would run, ‘a wise son will make, &c. ‘Your patient, I am ‘told, is in a bad way; he neither enjoys rest, nor takes medicine. Nay, his situation is worse than you ‘know of; yesterday, he became delirious, and is ‘now almost unmanageable; he tosses his arms, and endeavours to beat every one within his reach.’ In ‘Gaelic, will enjoy—will take—will toss—will endeavour.’

The Compound Tenses mark different modifications of time, which will be easily understood by analysing their component parts.

In the Active Voice, the compound tenses of the first order denote that the action is going on, but not completed at the time specified by the auxiliary verb, or its adjuncts; as, ‘ta mi ag bualadh’ I am at striking, i. e. I am striking; ‘bha mi ag bualadh an dè’ I was striking yesterday.

Those of the second order denote that the action is newly completed and past, at the time marked by the auxiliary verb; ‘tha mi air bualadh’ I am after striking, i. e. I have struck, Je viens de frapper; ‘Bha ‘mi air bualadh’ I was after striking, i. e. I had struck.

In the Passive Voice, the compound tenses of the first order denote that the action is finished at the time marked by the auxiliary verb; ‘tha mi buailte’, I am struck.

Those of the second order denote that the action is newly finished at the time marked by the auxiliary; ‘tha mi air mo bhualadh’ I am after my striking, or I am after the striking of me; which has always a passive signification; that is, it is always understood, from this form of expression, that striking is the action of some agent different from the person struck. It is equivalent to I have been struck, Je viens d’être frappé.

A set of Compound Tenses, of a structure similar to these last, having the preposition ‘ag,’ in place of ‘air,’ is sometimes used, and in a passive sense, denoting that the action is going on at the time marked by the auxiliary; as, ‘tha ’n tigh ’g a thogail’ the house is at its building, i. e. a building; ‘s’ea ‘bhladhna agus dà fhichead bha ’n teampull so ’g a ‘thogail’ forty and six years was this temple in building. ‘Bha an crodh ’g an leigeadh’ the cows were a milking. So in English, the book is a-printing; the deed’s a-doing now.

The verbs 'Tabhair, Abair, Faigh,' have a double Preterite Subjunctive. The latter form of it, which is derived regularly from the Root, is used after the same particles which are prefixed to the Negative Mood, viz. 'ni, cha, nach, mur, gu, an, am'.

OF DEFECTIVE VERBS.

The following defective verbs are in common use. 'Arsa' said, quoth, indeclinable; used only in the Pret. Aff. through all the persons; 'arsa Dòmhnall' quoth Donald.

'Tiugainn' come along, 'tiuainnibh' come ye along, used only in the 2d pers. sing. and plur. of the Imperative.

'Theab mi' I was near to, I had almost; used through all the persons of the Pret. Aff. and Neg.; as 'theab iad bhliht caillte' they had nearly perished.

'Is mi' I am, used in the Pres. and Pret. Tenses, which are declined as follows.

Affirmative Mood.

Present.		Preterite.
Sing.		Sing.

2 Bu tu,
3 B' e;
Plur.
1 Bu sinn,
2 Bu sibh,
3 B' iad.

The only varieties of form which this Verb admits of, are the two syllables 'is' and 'bu'. Each of these syllables commonly loses the vowel when it comes in opposition with another vowel.

It is remarkable, that in the Pres. Neg. the Verb disappears altogether, and the Preceding Particle, 'ni, cha, nach, gur', &c. and the subsequent Pronoun, or Noun, are always understood to convey a proposition, or a question, as unequivocally as though a Verb had been expressed; as 'cha tu' thou art not, 'nach e?' is he not? is it not he? 'am misc e?' is it I? 'cha luchd-brathaidh sinn', we are not spies. 'Am mò thusa na Abraham?' Art thou greater than Abraham? 'gur coir ùrnuigh a dheanamh' that it is proper to pray.

OF THE RECIPROCATING STATE OF VERBS.

Any transitive Verb may be so combined with a Pronoun, either Personal or Possessive, that it shall denote the agent to be also the object of the action. This may be called the reciprocating state of the Verb. It is declined as follows:

Buail thu féin, strike thyself.

Infinitive Mood.

From the foregoing example it appears, that the Verb, in its reciprocating state, retains its original form throughout its several Moods, Tenses, and Persons. In the simple Tenses, the Personal Pronoun immediately following the Verb is the Nominative to the Verb. The same Pronoun repeated is to be understood as in the objective state. The word 'féin' corresponding to the English self, accompanies the last Pronoun.

OF THE IMPERSONAL USE OF VERBS.

Intransitive Verbs, though they do not regularly admit of a Passive Voice, yet are used impersonally in the 3d Pers. Sing. of the Passive Tenses. This impersonal use of the Passive of intransitive Verbs is founded on the same principle with the Latin Impersonals concurritur, pugnatum est, &c. which are equivalent to concursum fit, pugna facta est. So in Gaelic, 'gluaisfear leam' I will move, 'gluaisfear leo' they will move, 'ghuillfeadh leinn' we did weep, 'fheabair a nobis'. 'Cha bhithear saor o pheacadh' there wanteth not sin.

To the Class of Impersonals ought to be referred a certain part of the Verb which has not yet been mentioned. It resembles in form the Fut. Negat. Passive; 'buailfear, faicfear, faighfear', &c. In signification, it is Active, Present, and Affirmative. In the course of a narrative, when the speaker wishes to enliven his style by representing the occurrences narrated as present, and passing actually in view; instead of the Preterite Tenses, he adopts the Part of the Verb now described, employing it in an impersonal acceptation, without a Nominative to it expressed. One or two examples will serve to exhibit the use and effect of this anomalous Tense.—'Shuidh an òg bhean air sgeir, is a sùil air an lear. Chunnac i long a' teachid air barrailh nan tonn. Dh' aithnich i aogas a leamain, is chlisg a cridhe 'n a com. Gun mhoille gun tàmh, buailfear dh' fhios na tràighe; agus faighfear an laoch, 's a dhaoine m' a thimchioll'. In English thus: 'The young woman sat on a rock, and her eye on the sea. She spied a ship coming on the tops of the waves. She perceived the likeness of her lover, and her heart bounded in her breast. Without delay or stop, she hastens to the shore; and finds the hero, with his men around him.

OF AUXILIARY VERBS.

It has been already shown how 'bi' be, is used as an Auxiliary in the declension of all verbs. There are two other verbs which are occasionally employed in a similar capacity; the one with an Active, the other with a Passive effect. These are 'dèan' do or make, and 'rach' go.

The simple tenses of 'dèan' combined with the Infinitive of any verb, correspond to the English auxiliary do, did. It sometimes adds to the emphasis, but not to the sense. The following are examples of this Auxiliary combined with the Infinitive of an Intransitive verb. 'Rinn e seasamh' he made standing, i. e. he did stand; 'dèan suidhe' make sitting, i. e. sit down; 'dheanainn gul agus caoidh' I would make weeping and lamentation, i. e. I would weep and lament. The same arrangement takes place when the Auxiliary is combined with the Infinitive of a Transitive verb, accompanied by a possessive pronoun; as 'fìnn e mo bhualadh' he made my striking, i. e. he made [or caused] the striking of me, or he did strike me; 'cha dèan mi do mholadh' I will not make your praising, i. e. I will not praise you; 'dèan do gharadh' make your warming, 'dèan do gharadh féin' make your own warming, i. e. warm yourself.

The Simple Tenses of 'rach', combined with the Infinitive of a transitive verb, correspond to the Passive Voice of the verb; as 'chaidh mo bhualadh' my striking went, i. e. came to pass, or happened, equivalent to, I was struck; 'rachadh do mharbhadh' your killing would happen, i. e. you would be killed.

CHAP. VI.—OF ADVERBS.

THE number of simple Adverbs in Gaelic is but small. Adverbial phrases, made up of two or more words, are sufficiently numerous. Any adjective may be converted into an adverbial expression, by prefixing to it the preposition 'gu' to; as 'fìr-neach' true, 'gu fìr-neach' [corresponding] to [what is] true, κατὰ τὸ ἀληθές; i. e. truly.

Fa leth; severally, individually.

Glé; very.

Gu beachd; to observation, evidently, clearly.

Gu buileach; to effect, thoroughly, wholly.

Gu dearbh; to conviction, truly, certainly.

Gu deimhin; to assurance, assuredly, verily.

Gu léir; altogether.

Gu leòr; to sufficiency, enough.

Gun amharus; without doubt, doubtless.

Gun chàrd; without rest, incessantly, without hesitation.

Leth mar leth; half and half.

Le chéile; with each other, together.

Maraon; as one, together, in concert.

Mar an ceudna; in like manner, likewise.

Mar sin; as that, in that manner.

Mar so; as this, thus.
 Mar sud; as you, in you manner.
 Mu seach; in return, alternately.
 Na, Nar; let not,—used optatively, or imperatively.
 Nach; that not, who not, not?
 Ni; not.

CHAP. VII.—OF PREPOSITIONS.

THE Prepositions, strictly so called, are single words, most of them monosyllables, employed to mark relation. Relation is also expressed by combinations of words, which often correspond to simple prepositions in other languages. These combinations are, not improperly, ranked among the prepositions. The following list contain, first, the Prepositions properly so called, which are all simple; secondly, improper Prepositions, which, with one or two exceptions, seem all to be made up of a simple Preposition and a Noun.

PROPER PREPOSITIONS.

Aig, Ag, at .	Mar, like to .
Air, on , or after .	Mu, about .
Ann, in .	O, Ua, from .
As, A, out of .	Os, above .
De, of .	Ri, Ris, to .
Do, to .	Róimh, before .
Eadar, between .	Tar, Thar, over, across .
Fa, upon .	Tre,
Fuidh, Fo, under .	Troimh, } through .
Gu, Gus, to .	Throimh, }
Gun, without .	Seach, past, in comparison with .
Le, Leis, with, by .

The Preposition 'ann' is often written double: 'ann an eolas' in knowledge, 'ann an gliocas' in wisdom. The final n or m is changed into m before a labial, as 'am measg' among, 'ann am meadhon' in midst. Before the Article or the Relative, this Preposition is written 'anns', as 'anns an toiseach' in the beginning, 'an cor anns am bheil e' the condition in which he is; and in this situation, the letters ann are often dropped, and the s alone retained, as 's an toiseach' in the beginning.

The Preposition 'do', like the verbal particle, and the Possessive Pronoun of the same sound, loses the o before a vowel, and the consonant is aspirated, thus; 'dli' Albainn' to Scotland. It is also preceded sometimes by the vowel a when it follows a final consonant; as 'dol a dli' Éirin' going to Ireland. 'Do', as has been already observed, often loses the d altogether, and is written a; as 'dol a Dhunéidin' going to Edinburgh.

The manner of combining these prepositions with nouns will be shewn in treating of Syntax. The manner of combining them with the personal pronouns must be explained in this place, because in that connection they appear in a form somewhat different from their radical form. A Proper Preposition is joined to a Personal Pronoun, by incorporating both into one word; commonly with some change on the Preposition, or on the Pronoun, or on both.

The following are the Prepositions which admit of this kind of combination, incorporated with the several Personal Pronouns.

Prep.	1st Perf.	Singular. 2d Perf.	3d Perf.	1st Perf.	Plural. 2d Perf.	3d Perf.
Aig; } at .	agam,	agad,	{ m. aige, at him; f. aice, at her.	againn,	agaibh,	aca, at them.

Prep.	1st Perf.	Singular. 2d Perf.	3d Perf.	1st Perf.	Plural. 2d Perf.	3d Perf.
Ee;	leam,	leat,	{ m. leis, f. leathia,	leinn,	leibh,	leo.
Mu ;	umam,	umad,	{ m. uime, f. uimpe,	umainn,	umaibh,	umpa.
O, Ua ;	uam,	uait,	{ m. uaiti, f. uaipe,	uainn,	uaibh,	uapa.
Ri ;	riam,	riut,	{ m. ris, f. riithe,	ruinn,	riibh,	riu.

Troimh ;	tromham,	tromhad,	{ m. troimhe, f. troimpe,	tromhainn,	tromhaibh.	trompa.

In most of these compound terms, the fragments of the Pronouns which enter into their composition, especially those of the first and second Persons, are very conspicuous. These fragments take after them occasionally the emphatic syllables sa, san, ne, in the same manner as the Personal Pronouns themselves do; as ‘agam-sa’ at ME, ‘aige-san’ at HIM, ‘uainn-e’ from US.

The two Prepositions ‘de’ and ‘do’ have long been confounded together, both being written ‘do.’ It can hardly be supposed that the composite words ‘dhiom, dhìot’, &c. would have been distinguished from ‘dhomh, dhuit’, &c. by orthography, pronunciation, and signification; if the Prepositions, as well as the Pronouns, which enter into the composition of these words, had been originally the same. In ‘dhiom’, &c. the initial Consonant is always followed by a small Vowel. In ‘dhomh’, &c. with one exception, it is followed by a broad Vowel.—Hence it is presumable that the Preposition which is the root of ‘dhiom’, &c. must have had a small Vowel after d; whereas the Root of ‘dhomh’, &c. has a broad Vowel after d.—‘De’ is a preposition preserved in Latin, (a language which has many marks of affinity with the Gaelic,) in the same sense which must have belonged to the root of ‘dhiom’, &c. in Gaelic.

CHAP. VIII.—OF CONJUNCTIONS.

UNDER this class of words, it is proper to enumerate not only those single Particles which are usually denominated Conjunctions; but also the most comnect either words or sentences.

CHAP. IX.—OF INTERJECTIONS.

The syllables or sounds, employed as expressions of various emotions or sensations, are numerous in Gaelic, but for the most part provincial, and arbitrary.
 Only one or two single vocables, and a few phrases, require to be noticed under this division.

Och! Ochan! alas.
 Ochan nan och! alas & welladay!
 Fire, faire! what a pother!
 Mo thruaighe! my misery!
 Mo chreachadh! my despoiling! } woe's me!

PART III.

OF SYNTAX.

GAELIC Syntax may be conveniently enough explained under the common divisions of Concord and Government.

CHAP. I.—OF CONCORD.

Under Concord is to be considered the agreement of the Article with its Noun;—of an Adjective with its Noun;—of a Pronoun with its Antecedent;—of a Verb with its Nominative;—and of one Noun with another.

SECTION I.

OF THE AGREEMENT OF THE ARTICLE WITH A NOUN.

Collocation.

The Article is always placed before its Noun, and next to it, unless when an Adjective intervenes.

Form.

The Article agrees with its Noun in Gender, Number, and Case. Final n is changed into m before a plain Labial; as, 'am baile' the town, 'am fear' the man. It is usually cut off before an aspirated Palatal, or Labial, excepting fh; as, 'a' cbaora' the sheep, 'a' mhuc' the son, 'a' choin' of the dog. In the Dat. Sing. initial a is cut off after a Preposition ending in a Vowel; as, 'do' n chloich' to the stone.

A Noun, when immediately preceded by the Article, suffers some changes in Initial Form:—1. With regard to Nouns beginning with a Consonant, the aspirated form is assumed by a mas. noun in the gen. and dat. singular; by a fem. noun in the nom. and dat. singular. If the noun begins with s followed by a vowel or by a Liquid, instead of having the s aspirated, t is inserted between the Article and the noun, in the foresaid cases; and the s becomes entirely quiescent. 2. With regard to Nouns beginning with a Vowel, t or h is inserted between the Article and the noun in certain Cases, viz. t in the nom. sing. of mas. nouns, h in the gen. sing. of fem. nouns; and h in the nom. and dat. plur. of nouns of either gender. Throughout the other sing. and plur. Cases, all nouns retain their Primary Form.

The following examples show all the varieties that take place in declining a Noun with the Article.

D. Na Clàrsaichibh fonnmhor.

An Adjective, beginning with a Lingual, and preceded by a Noun terminating in a Lingual, retains its primary form in all the Singular cases; for the sake, it would seem, of preserving the agreeable sound arising from the coalescence of the two Linguals; as 'nighean donn' a brown maid, instead of 'nighean dhonn'; 'a' choin duibh' of the black dog, instead of 'a' choin dhuibh'; 'air a chois deis' on his right foot, instead of 'air a chois dheis.'

II. A Noun preceded by an Adjective assumes the aspirated Form; as 'ard bheann' a high hill, 'cruaidh dheuchainn' a hard trial.

1. A Noun preceded by a Numeral is in the primary Form; as ' trì meòir' three fingers, to which add 'iomadh' many, 'gach' every; as 'iomadh fear' many a man; 'gach craobh' every tree.—Except 'aon' one, 'dà' two; 'ceud' first; as 'aon fhear' one man, 'dà chraobh' two trees.

2. A Noun preceded by any of the following Possessive Pronouns, 'a' her, 'ar' our, 'bhuir' your, 'an' their, is in the primary Form; as 'a' màthair' her mother, 'ar bràthair' our brother. When the Possessive Pronoun 'a' her, precedes a Noun or an Adjective beginning with a vowel, h is inserted between them; as 'a h-athair' her father, 'a h-aon mhac' her only son. The Possessive Pronouns 'ar', our, 'bhuir' your, usually take n between them and the following Noun or Adjective beginning with a vowel; as 'ar n-athair' our father, 'bhuir n-aran' your bread.

3. A Noun beginning with a Lingual, preceded by an Adjective ending in n, is in the primary Form; as 'aon duine' one man, 'seann sluagh' old people.

SECTION III.

OF THE AGREEMENT OF A PRONOUN WITH ITS ANTECEDENT.

The Personal and Possessive Pronouns follow the Number of their Antecedents, i. e. of the Nouns which they represent. Those of the 3d Pers. Sing. follow also the Gender of their antecedent; as, 'Sheas a' bhean aig a chosaibh, agus thòisich i air am fhuachadh leis a deuraibh, agus thiomraich i iad le gruaig a cinn'. The woman stood at his feet, and she began to wet them with her tears, and she wiped them with the hair of her head. They follow, however, not the Gender of the Antecedent, but the sex of the creature signified by the Antecedent, in those words in which Sex and Gender disagree; as 'an gobhlan-gaoithe mar an ceudn' do sholair nead dhi' féin' the swallow, too, hath provided a nest for herself. 'Gobhlan-gaoithe' a swallow, is a masc. Noun, as appears by the masc. Article; but as it is the dam that is spoken of, the reference is made by the Personal Pronoun of the fem. gender.—‘Ta gliccas air a fireanachadh leis a cloinn’ Wisdom is justified by her children. ‘Gliccas’ is a masc. noun; but as Wisdom is here personified as a female, the regimen of the Possessive Pronoun is adapted to that idea.

If the Antecedent be a sentence, or clause of a sentence, the Pronoun is of the 3d Pers. Sing. Masculine: as ‘dh’ith na bà caola suas na bà reamhra, agus cha n-aithnicheadh orra e’ the lean cattle ate up the fat cattle, and it could not be known by them.

If the Antecedent be a collective Noun, the Pronoun is of the 3d Pers. Plur. as ‘thoir àithne do ’n t-sluagh, d’ eagal gu ’n bris iad a steach’ charge the people lest they break in.

An Interrogative combined with a Personal Pronoun, asks a question without the intervention of the Substantive verb; as ‘co mise?’ who [am] I? ‘co iad na daoine sin?’ who [are] those men? ‘cia i a’ cheud àithne?’ which [is] the first commandment? In interrogations of this form, the noun is sometimes preceded by the Personal Pronoun, and sometimes not; as ‘co e am fear?’ who [is] the man? ‘co am fear?’ what man? ‘Co am fear?’ is evidently an incomplete sentence, like what man? in English. The ellipsis may be supplied thus; ‘co e am fear a ta thu ciallachadh?’ who is the man whom you mean? This example may be abridged into another common interrogation, in which the Interrogative is immediately followed by the Relative; as ‘co a ta thu ciallachadh?’ who [is he] whom you mean? ‘ciod a ta ’thu faicinn?’ what [is it] that you see?

In an interrogative sentence including a Personal Pronoun and a Noun, as, ‘co e am fear sin?’ if the Noun be restricted in its signification by some other words connected with it, such as the Article, an Adjective, another Noun in the Genitive, or a relative clause; then the Pronoun usually follows the Gender of the Noun, or the Sex of the object signified by the Noun, if the Gender does not correspond to it; as ‘co e am fear a theid a suas?’ who is the man that shall ascend? ‘co i am boirionnach sin?’ who is that woman? ‘cia i a’ cheud àithne?’ which is the first command?—If the Noun be not so restricted, the Pronoun is of the masculine gender; as ‘ciod e uchd-mhacachd?’ what is adoption? ‘ciod e ùrnaigh?’ what is prayer?

SECTION IV.

OF THE AGREEMENT OF A VERB WITH ITS NOMINATIVE.

As the Verb has no variation of form corresponding to the Person or Number of its Nominative, the connection between a Verb and its Nominative can be marked only by its collocation. Little variety therefore is allowed in this respect. The Nominative, whether Noun or Pronoun, is ordinarily placed after the Verb; as ‘tha mi’ I am, ‘rìngadh duine-cloinne’ a man-child is born. The Article or an Adjective, is frequently placed between the Verb and its Nominative; as ‘thainn an uair’ the hour is come; aithrisear iomadh droch sgeul’ many an evil tale will be told. Sometimes, but more rarely, circumstances are expressed between the Verb and its Nominative; as ‘rugadh dhuinne, an diugh, ann am baile Dhaibhidh, an Slànuighear, there is born to us, this day, in David’s town, the Saviour.

Vol. I.

The Relatives ‘a’ who, ‘nach’ who not, are always put before the verb; as ‘am fear a thuit,’ the man who fell; ‘am fear nach dean beud,’ the man who will not commit a fault.

In poetry, or poetical style, where inversion is allowed, the Nominative is sometimes placed before the Verb; as ‘doimhneachd na talmhainn ta ’n a làimh’ in his hand is the depth of the earth.

In those Persons of the Verb in which the terminations supply the place of the Personal Pronouns, no Nominative is expressed along with the Verb.

The Infinitive often takes before it the Nominative of the Agent; in which case the Preposition ‘do’ is either expressed or understood before the Infinitive; as ‘feuch, cia meud a’ mhaith, bràithre do bhli ’n an còmhnuidh ann an sìth!’ Behold, how great a good it is, that brethren dwell in peace! ‘Is e mi dh’ fhanuinn ’s an fheòil, a’ s feumaille dhuibhshe’ my abiding in the flesh is more useful for you.

SECTION V.

OF THE AGREEMENT OF ONE NOUN WITH ANOTHER.

When in the same sentence, two or more Nouns, applied as names to the same object, stand in the same grammatical relation to other words; it should naturally be expected that their Form, in so far as it depends on that relation, should be the same; in other words, that Nouns denoting the same object, and related alike to the governing word, should agree in Case. This accordingly happens in Greek and Latin. In Gaelic, where a variety of form gives room for the application of the same rule, it has been followed in some instances; as ‘Donncha mac Chailein mhic Dhòmhnaill’ Duncan the son of Colin the son of Donald; where the words ‘Chailein’ and ‘mhic’ denoting the same person, and being alike related to the preceding Noun ‘mac’ are on that account both in the same Case. It must be acknowledged, however, that this rule, obvious and natural as it is, has not been uniformly observed by the speakers of Gaelic. For example; instead of ‘mac Ioseph an t-saoir’ the son of Joseph the carpenter, many would more readily say ‘mac Ioseph an saor.’

CHAP. II.—OF GOVERNMENT.

UNDER this head is to be explained the Government of Nouns, of Adjectives, of Verbs, of Prepositions, and of Conjunctions.

SECTION I.

OF THE GOVERNMENT OF NOUNS.

One Noun governs another in the Genitive. The Noun governed is always placed after that which governs it; as 'ceann tìghe' the head of a house or family; 'solus na grèine' light of the sun; 'bainne ghabhar' milk of goats.

The Infinitives, or present participles, of Transitive Verbs, being themselves Nouns, govern in like manner the Genitive of their object; as 'ag cur sil' sowing seed, 'a dh' fhaicinn an t-sluaigh' to see the people, 'air leughadh an t-soisgeil' after reading the gospel.

Although no good reason appears why this rule, which is common to the Gaelic with many other languages, should ever be set aside; yet it has been set aside in speaking, and sometimes in writing Gaelic.

1. When the Noun governed does in its turn govern another Noun in the Genitive, the former is often put in the Nominative instead of the Genitive case.

2. Such expressions as the following seem to be exceptions to the rule; 'dithis mac', 'ceathrar mac', 'leanabaihb mac'.—In the following similar instances, the rule is observed; 'dithis mhae', 'dithis fhear'.

The same anomaly takes place in the regimen of the Infinitive, as in that of other Nouns. Though an Infinitive be in that grammatical relation to a preceding Noun which would require its being put in the Genitive; yet when itself also governs another noun in the Genitive, it often retains the form of the Nominative.

The Infinitive is not put in the Genitive, when preceded by a Possessive Pronoun, because it is in the same limited state as if it governed a noun in the Genitive Case; as 'a' chum am marbhadh 's na beanntaibh', to kill them in the mountains. Not 'marbhadh', which is the Case regularly governed by 'chum'. 'Co tha 'g jarraidh do mharbhadh?' who seeketh to kill thee?

When one Noun governs another in the Genitive, the Article is never joined to both, even though each be limited in its signification; as 'mac an rìgh' the son of the king, not 'am mac an rìgh'; 'taobh deas a' bhaile' the south side of the town, not 'an taobh deas a' bhaile'. For the most part, the Article is thus joined to the latter noun. Sometimes it is joined to the former noun; as 'an ceann tìghe' the head of the family, 'an ceann iùil' the pilot.

A Possessive Pronoun joined to the Noun governed excludes, in like manner, the Article from the noun governing; as 'barr-iall a bhròige' the latchet of his shoe, not 'am barr-iall a bhròige'; 'obair blur làmh' the work of your hands, not 'an obair blur làmh.'

The Noun governed is sometimes in the Primary, sometimes in the Aspirated Form.

Proper names of the Masculine Gender are in the Aspirated Form; as 'bràthair Dhòmhnail' Donald's brother; 'uaigh Choluim' Columba's grave. Except when a final and an initial Lingual meet; as 'clann Dhòmhnail' Donald's descendants; 'beinn Deirg' Dar-go's hill.

When both Nouns are Appellatives, and no word intervenes between them; the initial Form of the latter noun follows, for the most part, that of an Adjective agreeing with the former noun.

EXCEPT. If the latter Noun denote an individual of a species, that is, if it take the Article a before it in English, it is put in the primary form, although the former Noun be feminine; as 'sùil caraid' the eye of a friend, not 'sùil charaid'.

SECTION II.

OF THE GOVERNMENT OF ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives of fulness govern the Genitive; as 'làn uamhainn' full of dread, 'buidheach bidh' satisfied with meat.

The first Comparative takes the Particle 'na' than, before the following Noun; as 'ni 's gle na an sneachdadh' whiter than the snow; 'b' fhaide gach mìos na bliadhna' each month seemed longer than a year.

The second Comparative is construed thus; 'is fearid mi so', I am the better for this; 'bu mhisd' e a' bhuille sin', he was the worse for that blow.

Superlatives are followed by the Preposition 'de' or 'dhe' of; as 'am fear a 's àirde dhe 'n trìuir' the man who is tallest of the three, the tallest man of the three.

SECTION III.

OF THE GOVERNMENT OF VERBS.

A Transitive Verb governs its object in the Nominative or Objective Case; as 'mharbh iad an Rìgh' they killed the king, 'na buail mi' do not strike me. The object is commonly placed after the Verb; but never between the Verb and its Nominative. Sometimes the object is placed, by way of emphasis, before the Verb; as 'mise chuir e ris ann an àite, agus esan chroch e' me he put again in my place, and him he hanged.

Many Transitive Verbs require a Preposition before their object; as 'iarr air Dhòmhnall' desire Donald; 'labhair ri Dhòmhnall' speak to Donald; 'leig le Dhòmhnall' let Donald alone; 'beannuich do Dhòmhnall' salute Donald; 'fiosraich de Dhòmhnall' inquire of Donald.

'Bu' was, requires the following initial Consonant to be aspirated; as 'bu mhaith dhuit' it was good for you; 'bu chruaidh an gnothuch' it was a hard case; except initial d, and t which are not aspirated; as 'bu dual duit' it was natural for you.

SECTION IV.

OF THE GOVERNMENT OF ADVERBS.

The collocation of Adverbs is for the most part arbitrary.

The Adverbs 'ro, glé' very, are placed before the Adjectives they modify, and require the following initial Consonant to be aspirated; as 'ro bleag' very little, 'glé gheal' very white.

The negative 'cha' not, when followed by a word beginning with a Labial or Palatal, requires the initial Consonant to be aspirated; as 'cha mhór e' it is not great; 'cha bhuail m' I will not strike; 'cha chuala m' I did not hear; but an initial Lingual remains unaspirated; as 'cha dèan m' I will not do, 'cha tog e' he will not raise, 'cha soirbhich iad' they will not prosper. N is inserted between 'cha' and an initial Vowel or an aspirated f; as 'cha n-e' it is not, 'cha n-éigin' it is not necessary, 'cha n-flaca m' I saw not.

The Negative 'n' requires h before an initial Vowel; as 'ni h-iad' they are not, 'ni h-cudar' it may not.

SECTION V.

OF THE GOVERNMENT OF PREPOSITIONS.

The Proper Prepositions 'aig, air', &c. govern the Dative; as 'aig mo chois' at my foot, 'air mo lámhl' on my hand. They are always placed before the word they govern. The following prepositions require the Noun governed to be put in the Aspirated Form, viz. 'de, do, fuidlh, fo, fa, gun, mar, mu, o, tre'. 'Air' sometimes governs the Noun in the Aspirated Form; as 'air bharrailh sgiath na gaoithe' on the extremities of the wings of the wind.—'Gun' governs either the Nominative or Dative; as 'gun chríoch' without end. 'Gun chéill' without understanding. 'Gun chloinn'.—'Mar', and 'gus' or 'gu' when prefixed to a Noun without the Article, usually govern the Dative case; as 'mar nighin' a daughter. 'Mar anhainn mhóir' like a great river. 'Gu crích mo shaoghail féin' to the end of my lifetime. But if the Article be joined to the Noun, it is governed in the Nominative; as 'mar a' ghrian' like the sun. 'Gus an sruth' to the stream. 'Gus a' chríoch' to the end.—'Eadar' governs the Nom. as 'eadar a' chraobh agus a' chlach' between the tree and the stone. 'Eadar', when signifying between, requires the Primary Form; as 'eadar maighistir agus muinntearach' between a master and a servant: when it signifies both, it requires the Aspirated Form; as 'eadar shean agus óg' both old and young; 'eadar fheara agus mhinai' both men and women.

The Prepositions 'as, gus, leis, ris', are used before the Monosyllables 'an, am, a'. The corresponding Prepositions 'á, gu, le, fí', often take an h before an initial Vowel; as 'á h-Eirín' out of Ireland; 'gu h-calamlh' readily; 'le h-cagal' with fear.

The Improper Prepositions govern the following Noun in the Genitive; as 'air feadh na tíre' through-out the land; 'an aghaidh an t-sluaigh' against the people; 'rè na h-ùine' during the time. It is manifest that this Genitive is governed by the Noun 'feadh, aghaidh, rè', &c. which is always included in the Preposition.

Prepositions are often prefixed to a clause of a sentence; and then they have no regimen; as 'gus am bòrd a ghiùlan' to carry the table. 'Luath chum fuil a dhòrtadh' swift to shed blood. 'An déigh an obair a chríochnadh' after finishing the work.

SECTION VI.

OF THE GOVERNMENT OF CONJUNCTIONS.

The Conjunctions 'agus' and, 'no' or, couple the same Cases of Nouns; as 'air feadh chreagan agus choilltean' through rocks and woods; 'ag reubadh nam bruaich 's nan crann' tearing the banks and the trees. When two or more Nouns, coupled by a Conjunction, are governed in the Dative by a Preposition, it is usual to repeat the Preposition before each Noun; as 'air fad agus air leud' in length and in breadth; 'n an críche' n an cainnte, agus n am beus' in their heart, in their speech, and in their behaviour.

'Co', or 'cho', as, prefixed to an Adjective, commonly requires the initial consonant of the Adjective to be aspirated; as 'co mhaith' as good, 'co ghriinn' as fine. But sometimes we find 'cho mòr' as great, 'cho buan' as durable, &c. without the aspirate.

The Conjunctions 'mur' if not, 'gu, gur' that, are always joined to the Negative Mood; as 'mur' eil m' if I be not; 'gu robh e' that he was. M or n is often inserted, euphonic causa, between 'gu' and an initial Consonant; viz. m before a Labial, n before a Palatal or a Lingual; as 'gu-m' facu tu' that you saw; 'gu-n' dubhairt iad' that they said.

The Conjunctions 'ma' if, 'o, o'n' because, since, are joined to the Pres. and Pret. Affirmative, and Fut. Subjunctive; as 'ma ta e' if he be, 'o'n tha e' since he is; 'ma bhuail e' if he struck; 'o'n bhuail e' because he struck; 'ma bhualeas tu' if you strike; 'o bhliheas sinn' since we shall be.

'Nam, nan' if; is joined only to the Pret. Subjunctive. The initial Consonant of the Verb loses its aspiration after this Conjunction; as 'nam bithinn' if I were; 'nan tuiteadh a' chraobh' if the tree should fall.

'Ged', or 'ge' although, is used before the Present and Pret. Affirmative, the Fut. Negative, and the Pret. Subjunctive; as 'ged tha e' though he be; 'ged bha m' though I was; 'ge do bhuail thu m' though you struck me; 'ged bhuail thu m' though you strike me; 'ged bhiceadh e dhomh' though he should give me.

PART IV.

OF DERIVATION AND COMPOSITION.

CHAP. I.—OF DERIVATION.

THE Parts of Speech which are formed by derivation from other words are Nouns, Adjectives, and Verbs. These are chiefly derived from Nouns and Adjectives, and a few from Verbs.

I. NOUNS.

Derivative Nouns may be classed as follows, according to the varieties of their termination.

1. Abstract Nouns in as, formed from Adjectives or Nouns; as from 'ceart' just, 'ceartas' justice; from 'diomhan' idle, vain, 'diomhanas' idleness, vanity.

2. Abstract Nouns in achd, formed from Adjectives, and sometimes, though more rarely, from Verbs and Nouns; as from 'naomh' holy, 'naomhachd' holiness; from 'domhain' deep, 'doimhneachd' contracted for 'domhaineachd' depth; from 'rìgh' a king, 'rìoghachd' a kingdom.

3. Abstract Nouns formed from the Genitive of Adjectives by adding e; as from 'dall' gen. 'doill' blind, 'doille' blindness; from 'geal' gen. 'gìl' white, 'gìle' whiteness.

4. Abstract Nouns in ad, formed from the Comparative of Adjectives, and used in speaking of the degree of a quality; as 'gilead' whiteness, 'bòidhchead' beauty, 'doimhneachd' depth.

5. Nouns in air or oir, ach, iche, derived, most of them, from nouns, and signifying persons or agents; as 'piobair' a player on the pipe, from 'piob' a pipe; 'clàrsair' a player on the harp, from 'clàrsach' a harp; 'marcach' a rider, from 'marc' a horse; 'athach' a man of terror, a gigantic figure, from 'athadh' fear.

6. Diminutives in an, and in ag or og, formed from Nouns or Adjectives; as 'lochan' a small lake, from 'loch' a lake; from 'braid' thief, 'bradag' a thievish girl; from 'ciar' dark-coloured, 'ciarag' a little dark-coloured creature.—These Diminutives are often formed from the Genitive of their Primitives; as from 'feur' gen. 'feòir' grass, 'feòirnein' a pile of grass.

Some Nouns are formed in an, which are not Diminutives; as from 'lùb' to bend, 'lùban' a bow.

7. Collective Nouns in ridh, derived from Nouns or Adjectives; as from 'òg' young, 'òigridh' youth, in the collective sense of the word; from 'mac' a son, 'macraidh' sons, young men.

8. Nouns in ach, chiefly Patronymics, formed from Proper Names, thus; from 'Dòmhnall' Donald, is formed 'Dòmhnallach' a man of the name of Macdonald; from 'Griogar' Gregor, 'Griogarach' a Macgregor; from 'Albainn' Scotland, 'Albannach' a Scotsman; from 'Eirín' Ireland, 'Eirineach' an Irishman.

9. Collective Nouns in ach; as from 'duille' a leaf, 'duilleach' foliage; 'giubhas' fir, 'giubhasach' a fir wood.

II. ADJECTIVES.

1. Adjectives in ach formed generally from Nouns; as from 'fìrin' truth, 'fìrinneach' true, faithful; from 'sunn' glee, 'sunnach' cheerful.

2. Adjectives in mhòr or òr, derived from Nouns; as from 'àdh' felicity, 'àdhmhòr' happy, blessed; from 'feòil' flesh, 'feòilmhòr' carnal.

3. Adjectives in ail derived from Nouns; as from 'fear' man, 'fearail' manful; from 'caraid' a friend, 'càirdeil'.

4. A few Adjectives in ta or da, derived from Nouns; as 'fìreantach' righteous, from 'fìrean'.

III. VERBS.

Verbs in ich, for the most part Transitive, and implying causation, derived from Nouns or Adjectives; as, from 'geal' white, 'gealaich' to whiten; 'naomh' holy, 'naomhaich' to sanctify.

CHAP. II.—OF COMPOSITION.

All compound words in Gaelic consist of two component parts, exclusive of the derivative terminations enumerated in the preceding Chapter. Of these component parts, the former may be conveniently named the Prepositive, the latter the Subjunctive term. It sometimes happens, though rarely, that the Subjunctive term also is a compound word, which must itself be decomposed in order to find out the Root.

In compounding words, the usual mode has been, to prefix to the term denoting the principal idea, the word denoting the accessory idea, or circumstance by which the signification of the principal word is modified. Accordingly we find Nouns, Adjectives, and Verbs modified by prefixing to them a Noun, an Adjective, a Verb, or a Preposition.

In forming compound words, a Rule of very general application, is, that when the Subjunctive term begins with a Consonant, it is aspirated. From this Rule, however, are to be excepted, 1. Words beginning with s followed by a *m*ute, which never admit the aspirate; 2. Words beginning with a Lingual when the Prepositive term ends in n; 3. A few other instances in which there is an euphonic agreement between the Consonants thus brought into apposition, which would be violated if either of them were aspirated.

These observations will be found exemplified in the following Compounds.

In writing compound words, the component parts are sometimes separated by a hyphen, and sometimes not. The use of the hyphen does not seem to be regulated by any uniform practice.

A, a; in Irish  $\mathfrak{A}$ ,  $\mathfrak{A}$ , Ailm, a Fir tree: abies. O'Flakerty. A Palm tree: palma. Vallancy; Hebrew,  $\aleph$ , a leader, is assumed as the first letter of the Gaelic, as of almost every other alphabet: its sound also imitating the earliest utterance of the human voice. The same figure  $\aleph$  which is now exhibited in the Syriac, Arabic, and Persian alphabets, as well as in the Oghum, or occult writings of the ancient Irish, may have been its original shape.

A', art. (used before aspirated labials and palatals) gen. sing. fem. Na. e. g. "A' chos; the foot: pes. "Na Coise;" of the foot: pedis. Pl. mas. et fem. Na. "Na casan;" the feet: pedes. The absence of the definite, supplies the place of an indefinite article, e. g. "Duine," a man. "An duine," the man. "Bean," a woman. "A' bhean," the woman. But the article is prefixed, and to be translated indefinitely, as in French, when joined to a noun in its general, or most extensive signification; e. g. "An duine;" man, in general; mankind: homo, i. e. genus humanum. "An gaol," love: amor. "Far an do mheudaicheadh am peacadh." Rom. v. 20. Where sin abounded. Ubi amplificatum est peccatum. Ir.  $\mathfrak{A}$ , et  $\mathfrak{A}$ h. Wel. Y, yn, yr, yz, ys. Arm. An, ar. Corn. An. Gr.  $\iota$ ,  $\iota$ ,  $\tau\omicron$ . Pers.  $\text{آ}$ an. Vide Am, An, Ant, different forms of the article.

VOL. I.

A, relat. pron. gen. et dat. An. Who, which, whom. that: qui, quæ, quæ. "Laoch a thuit." Fing. l. 6. A hero who fell. Heros qui cecidit. Wel. A. Gr.  $\tau\iota$ ,  $\epsilon$ . Hebr.  $\aleph$  ha.

À, pers. pron. Provin. Vide È. "Co à?" for "Co è?" who is he? quis est ille?

A, Sign of the vocative: vocativi signum. "Éirich a Chuchullain." Fing. l. 9. Rise, Cuchullin. Surge, Cuchullin. It is omitted before an initial vowel, or Fh, initial, followed by a vowel. The Persic  $\aleph$  when added to a noun, forms a poetic vocative. It has the same effect in Arabic, if it precedes a proper name, when the discourse is directed to a person near at hand. Richards. Dict. in Voc. Aleph.

A, possess. pron. (corresponding to the 3 pers. pron. E or I.) His, her, its: suus, -a, -um, rel ejus, illius. Gram. "A mhac;" his son: filius ejus, masc. "A mac;" her son: filius ejus, fem. Elipsed before an initial vowel, or Fh, followed by a vowel, e. g. "Uchd." i. e. A uchd; his breast: pectus ejus, masc. "Fhalt." i. e. A fhalt; his hair: crines ejus, masc. In such cases, its place is supplied by an apostrophe before the vowel. The fem. is prefixed with h- interposed: as A h-uchd; her breast: pectus ejus, fem. After prepositions ending in vowels, it is in both genders

Birch and hazel (trees) on May-day, promising warmth. Betula corylusque calendis Maiis indicentes calorem. In reference to this term, and the customs anciently prevalent in Scotland, that indicate its etymology, the following extract, from the Statistical account of the parish of Callander in Perthshire, is inserted. Stat. Acc. Vol. XI. 621. "The people of this district have a custom which is fast wearing out, not only here, but all over the Highlands, and therefore ought to be noticed, as long as it remains. Upon the first day of May, called Beal-tun, or Bal-tein day, all the boys of a township, or hamlet, meet in the moors. They cut a table, in the green sod, of a round figure, by casting a trench in the ground, of such circumference as to hold the whole company. They kindle a fire, and dress a repast of eggs and milk, in the consistency of a custard. They knead a cake of oatmeal, which is toasted at the embers against a stone. After the custard is eaten up, they divide the cake into so many portions, as similar as possible to one another in size and shape, as there are persons in the company. They daub one of these portions all over with charcoal, until it be perfectly black. They put all the bits of cake into a bonnet. Every one, blind-folded, draws out a portion. He who holds the bonnet is entitled to the last bit. Whoever draws the black bit, is the devoted person who is to be sacrificed to Baal, whose favour they mean to implore, in rendering the year productive of the sustenance of man and beast. There is little doubt of these inhuman sacrifices having been once offered in this country, as well as in the East; although they now pass from the act of sacrificing, and only compel the devoted person to leap three times through the flames, with which the ceremonies of the festival are closed." *Scot.
